CHAPTER 1

WHAT IS SPIRITUALISM ALL ABOUT?

The word spiritualism is used so often in casual conversations that it has lost its essence or perspective. For some, it can mean praying and believing in something not visible to the eyes, trying to understand who God is and create their understanding of God, while for others, it can mean clearing up thoughts and having the power to work towards their goals. In general, the word spiritual often refers to understanding the world beyond the physical universe, beyond what we can taste, see, hear, touch or smell. In other words, it may mean understanding something beyond what one can comprehend.

With all those different understandings, people proclaim that they are spiritual. But the meaning of the same word is different from one to another. Words can be misleading when they are used to convey a thought or emotion, or sensation. What we mean by spirituality is pretty complicated as it encompasses an understanding of the non-physical world, so it falls in the area of imagination and speculations.

Understanding the Word' Spirituality

Let me start by explaining what the word "spirituality" means. I started looking at spirituality early in life because I wanted to find the meaning of 'Who We Are?', 'Who is God?' and 'What is the unseen world we can feel yet not see.' As we all know, “seeing is believing.”

Through my exploration of the metaphysical world, I understood that spirituality is learning about your spirit. But what is a spirit?

Whether it's an emotion or feeling, your spirit is who you are.

We are indeed all spirits, but we are afraid to discuss them because we believe everything unseen is unreal and ghostly. When you close your eyes and pray to something invisible, what are you praying to? It means that you are talking to something invisible. You pray to God but cannot see him. His imagined presence only fills you up. Since God cannot be seen, he can only be felt in various forms and shapes.

Similarly, we are visible in a variety of shapes and forms. All of us, including God, is formless. Taking on the form and shape to be seen and living in the physical world for a short time, then going back to the unseen world, we live in the physical world briefly. We are all part of this unseen world. Our first identity is as spiritual beings, and our second identity is as human beings. In the spiritual world, we are all connected. Every one of us understands the other without even speaking a word. Despite not being physically present to each other, we feel the presence of one another.

The point I intend to make is that we are emotions, feelings, and sensations. We are spirits, and studying us is spiritualism.

The spiritual path requires self-study.

Spirituality is about discovering more about yourself rather than learning from others, relying on yourself instead of others.

The act of observing your behavior, reactions, and emotional reactions. What does it mean to learn about yourself? How do you behave, deal with anger, regulate stress, how confident are you, how do you calm your fears, and what are your personal goals, not worldly or social goals? The main purpose of learning is for you to find out what your life's purpose is.

Who better than you to study your own life?

The fact that others ask me to evaluate them or make a judgment about them makes me smile. What makes me know you more than you know yourself? Your knowledge of yourself is greater than mine. The type of programming you have makes it impossible for me to know who you are. In what manner do you operate? You are the best judge of yourself. Be sure to trust your judgment about yourself before judging others.

What are the ways you operate spiritually? The effort has no place in the spiritual world. In the physical world, the effort is an integral part. The effort to breathe is the very basis of physical existence. In contrast, the spiritual world is effortless in its purest form.

Pure energy or spirit is what you are by nature. A spirit is a pure energy, any impurity changes its course. Spirits have an impressionable quality and are affected by their influences.

A spirit can also be considered true or the way it is". Exactly what is lying? By lying, we mean changing something from its original form or not presenting it as it is.

If you lie, the spirit cannot cope, and you start separating from yourself. Some religions require you to confess your sins and lies because only then can you see the "way it is" from the "way it was not." By confessing your sins and lying, you gain a closer connection to yourself. Any alignment change, whether slight or major, results in a change in the spirit, which becomes misaligned or impure.

Even if we change a few details, it changes our emotional level and behavior, and we do not remain ourselves and become something else. We might feel that lying is very casual and unnoticeable. But even by accepting lies, we change the true nature of a spirit and change ourselves. By doing so, we burden ourselves with so much baggage, which makes us restless, confused, and uneasy. Hence, making us uncomfortable with ourselves is what changing our spiritual nature means.

The basic nature of the spirit is to remain the same, unadulterated, pure, and the way it is.

If you permit yourself to lie, thinking it is some form of creative imagination or creation, you will soon become a "lie factory." You will find yourself lying without any reason. Just for the heck of it, and that is the journey downhill. You become more and more solid and physical and less and less ethereal and metaphysical.

That is the end of spiritualism.

Due to the esoteric nature of spiritualism, people who followed this path started to appear better and wiser than others, with more knowledge about things than average humans. One ends up becoming a teacher or Guru who knows the truths. One does not owe to share one's greater knowledge with others, and also, one should not enforce one's greater understanding with others. The best service one can do to mankind is to inspire living by example. A normal life fulfilling the meaning of existence and ready to move on once this physical living is over is called Spiritual living.

Normal living and Spiritual living are two sides of the same coin. Living in the human form as a spiritual being is normal living. If normal living is taking you to more and more effort, that implies you are not acting according to your real nature of a spiritual being who exists effortlessly. Life is not a punishment that you have to push through no matter what. Life is to live and enjoy every moment as if it is the first time you are in this moment.

Nature is the only teacher who can teach you what normal living is. Breaking the natural course of nature brings havoc in the form of natural calamities. So does the human problem show up when we break the natural cycle of existence of a spiritual being?
A spiritual being is a just pure source capable of exuberating tremendous energy, unaffected by human existence. Living life as a spiritual being is spiritualism.

CHAPTER 2

HOW TO ATTAIN A NATURAL STATE OF LIVING?

Explore how time, space, energy, and matter interact in the physical universe The focus of natural living is on restoring the balance of nature on which we thrive, which we have lost due to human activity. By relying on automation in various aspects of our lives, we lose sight of what is most important about living and bringing balance to our lives. When we don't live in balance with the universe, we are affected by it.

Countless unnatural things are a part of the physical universe in which we live. It is easy for us to fail to notice that our relationship with them isn't natural, and we are out of balance. We are affected in different ways by the physical universe when we are out of balance with it.

Physicists believe time to be the first feature of the physical universe.

Physical universes have beginnings and ends. It is through this concept of start and end that we can understand time. It is one of the most common worries people have to deal with time. Many factors contribute to this worry. Being late, being behind schedule, missing a deadline, and wanting more time. Our natural state of existence is affected by all these ties to time. Natural processes show remarkable consistency, as opposed to our physical world, growing over time, proceeding naturally, bearing fruit when it should bear fruit, and repeating themselves as they should. It is all cyclical and happens in the due course of existence.

The unnatural state of our lives now, however, forces us to rush through time. We try to accomplish things ahead of time, for example, growing vegetables every season, regardless of whether it is the right time. By hastening their maturation, we can produce more in less time. Speeding up everything from cars to gadgets is precisely what we strive to do. We perceive an increase in our average lifespan based on these methods. The race with time has contributed to a great deal of anxiety among us. Due to the feeling that time is running out, people's anxiety levels have risen.

As we look back on our lives, we might observe how much time controls us or how much time shapes our daily lives. Our lives will gradually become more relaxed if we simply begin to regulate that aspect of our lives. We will then recognize that we are gradually returning to our native state, where time is not a factor.

With the dawn of the day, our appetite begins to increase, and by the time the sun appears, our appetite reaches its peak, after which we again slow down by evening and are ready to sleep. The cycle and sense of time humans have are similar to those of all natural creatures. By running our lives by the calendar and relying on the clock every week, month, and year, we become more robotic and chaotic. Alerts and alarms characterize today's world, but they are not natural.

Getting to our natural state is as simple as stopping looking at the clock and living according to our natural inclinations as much as possible. You will see a difference in your body's vital health when you do this. By stopping to look at the time and following your instincts constantly, the body's natural clock will set its rhythm and follow the spiritual compass. When you are freed from time constraints, your disposition toward living a natural life will be heightened.

Time is just a consideration. Time is not physical. You can not see, touch, feel, smell or taste time. It is beyond the five senses. Time is made up of human beings. Spiritual beings do not live by time. Spiritual beings live forever they are beyond time. Spiritual beings are immortal. Human beings are mortal and listen to the tick tick of their heartbeat and tick tick of their watches and clocks.

As time is man-made and created so one can create at will. This can be the most valuable datum.

Life is measured by the actions taken to accomplish the tasks. An action is comprised of start, change, and completion. Most of the actions are stuck in these three parts, and time is stuck in these three parts.

Someone wants to start a new action, task, project, or venture but keeps on postponing this leads to the emotion of not having enough time to do anything else. More one postpones more, he falls short on time. If the same task gets started, all the stuck time gets released from that stuck point, and now one has time.

On the other hand, if someone has already started a new action, task, project, or venture but not doing anything about it and it is a pending action with him. His time is stuck in this pending action. He complains of having no time to do anything but the truth is that his time is stuck in the pending action. He can release as much time as he wants to by finishing the pending task. Sometimes just making a list of pending tasks gives back lots of time and relief. Then one can finish those pending tasks one by one and release all the fixation and time from those pending tasks.

Last but not least, the most important part of new action, task, project, or venture is to finish it up to the desired expectations. If the end product of any action is not what was expected to start, your time will be wasted, and you will be stuck in that unfinished, unwanted product forever. Making a list of the actions started and then continuing through them to the endpoint of completion gives you lots of time to spend.

This is how you create time for yourself by freeing yourself from the actions of living by doing the desired things at the desired expectations.

You can conquer the time shortage by creating more time by following the simple steps of recognizing, starting, changing, and completing any action step.

Space is the second feature of the physical universe.

Space is one of the most important components of the physical universe since every human being born on Earth is confronted with the concept of space. Space comes into existence once it gets defined. Space is always ascertained within boundaries. The physical limitations bring the concept of space. The body defines a human being. The body gives shape or space to humans. Spiritual beings are free from the constraints of space. They exist anywhere and everywhere. The physical universe creates the concept of space. The planet earth is well defined with its continents and oceans.

A human being feels safe if he finds space. If he can own some space. If he can hold on to the space. In space, we have limitations, like how much space we can face and how much space is enough for us; if it is less or more, that also affects us. There are limitations to space, such as the amount of space we can manage and the amount of space we need. Spaces that are too small or too large also affect us. If you've ever been in a room or residence where they've cluttered or low-pitched or chaotic or dusty, the notion of space can annoy or bother you without you realizing it.

For centuries, people have relied on the ancient science of Vastu Shastra, which says A well-ordered home brings more peace and clarity to your household, and that is the importance of Vastu, or Feng Shui is an ancient Chinese art of arranging buildings, objects, and space in an environment to achieve harmony and balance in a way that will bring peace and prosperity. which is concerned with organizing space and providing serenity and prosperity to homes to bring tranquillity and prosperity through the power of organizing the space in a particular way. It includes a comprehensive set of recommendations for freshly constructed residences and properties: Where to build doors, bedrooms, and other structures, as well as the property's color. Energy is believed to play a critical role in the home and the well-being of its occupants. Also, when people rearrange their belongings and make space in their homes, their health and environment begin to improve.

Different geometrical patterns give different sensations of space. One has one’s orientation about different kinds of setup. One should find out by questioning one’s inner space where one feels comfortable and creating that space around him. Colors also have a unique sense of limiting or expanding space. Pick your colors daily to have a sense of space. Some colors will absorb you, and some colors will expand you.

Natural living is when you should observe how much space you need. And if it falls below a certain level, you'll need to declutter your space by removing furniture, organizing your space, and minimizing the number of possessions you own. The reason why the health of people improves when they travel for vacation to open spaces is that they experience the naturalness of open space.

Space and time are interrelated and interdependent. From the origin point to the endpoint, space and time are interchangeable. The end to any cycle defines it and puts limits on the product, and that is the space, and that is the time.

Space enriches spiritual being and brings in the orientation of existing universally and forever. A human being creates space on an effort, but a spiritual being creates it effortlessly. More the human being adapts to natural living it needs less effort to create space and time. A spiritual being confined in the space of the body becomes a human being and believes only in human abilities. Once the being realizes that space can not be the limiting factor and the body is not the end of existence, one gains space, time, and immortality.

Make space by organizing your thoughts and thinking process. Do not let your emotions wander in all directions. Sit down and let thoughts flow and emotions settle. Experience the vast space in and around you. Your vision is limited by the thoughts and emotions you have. You are captive to your thoughts and emotions. Let these thoughts and emotions go by fully expressing them and see the openness your find all around you.

Often wars have been fought over occupied territories, and space has been the consideration. It had been a hidden desire of human beings to capture, control, and rule more and more space. Holding a position in space brings power to the human being. One can hold space by occupying a title, a job, a position, or a relationship. The definitive powers of these bring space and power to you. See how powerless you are if you do not have a title or a job assigned to you or are in a relationship with someone. Space comes by definition and boundaries. Total space does not give the feeling of space. Space between boundaries and space within definitions gives us the feeling of space. A human being wants to experience space, so he gets in the body and enjoys the sensation of having space and time.

The Third Feature of the Physical Universe is Energy:

We are energy or its various forms. Energy is the lightest version of existence in the physical universe. Energy can not be seen without any physical manifestations. A spiritual being needs a body to manifest. A spiritual being is best understood in the energy form. Spiritual beings can be sensed but can be seen via the body.

All the various types of equipment are used to transform energy in homes, such as television, computer, or refrigerator. And none of these was a part of a previous civilization; they all began with our so-called modern civilization. These new creations of energy are not in full understanding of the spiritual being. A spiritual being is overwhelmed with these energies. As a result, there is a significant energy imbalance in the environment in which we live. Minimizing the use of such energies brings a big relief on the physical and spiritual levels.

As part of my living in an environment similar to everyone else's, I avoid using microwaves and storing food in refrigerators and reheating it because I understand that energy has changed.

People are addicted to watching television, not realizing that it consumes a lot of energy. We must rely less on these electronic gadgets and devices; once we begin stabilizing ourselves with that energy, we will see that our naturalness continues to decrease.

The naturalness of the energy present in us is affected by the physical energy of gadgets like televisions and refrigerators. Hence, when physical energy is abundant all around us, we must create our spiritual energy to maintain a healthy balance between physical and spiritual energy.

Certain practices, such as observing silence for some time and observing your energy aura, can enhance our spiritual energy. Keeping silence is an excellent way to rebalance the energy in the house. Additionally, several elements can absorb excess energy in the atmosphere, one of which is sodium carbonate, because it removes the free particles circulating powerfully around your home. Therefore, you can put sodium bicarbonate in a dilute paste and place it in various rooms. It gradually begins to build up and eventually frees the house from the physical energy by absorbing free radicals that we receive from the internet, wireless, phones, computers, and all the other gadgets I mentioned previously. Using sodium bicarbonate is an age-old thing; it is kept in the refrigerator to absorb odors and keep the surroundings fresh and odor-free. Doctors use sodium when they do breast biopsies to alleviate their pain, so they're not excessively anxious.

The salt lamps are also a great energy absorber if you choose not to use sodium bicarbonate. Therefore, wherever you utilize these technological devices, if you place some salt lamps around, you will also be liberated from the imbalanced energy in your home. Cancer and other fatal diseases are caused by free radicals present in the environment due to physical energy. These free radicals are readily absorbed by salt, which is a conductor. As a result, it funnels the free radicals through it. Similarly, sodium bicarbonate is an ion absorber; it absorbs additional free radicals. You can buy Himalayan salt lamps and keep them in the room where you sit and work, at the very least.

Also, you must have probably observed that when you're sitting inside the home and walking out into your backyard, you get a sense of fresh air and freedom since there's less physical energy outside than inside the house. However, if you get away from the areas where we live to some farmhouses, farms, or mountains, you will experience a decrease in physical energy and an increase in naturalness. The physical energy in our homes is heavily affecting us, but we do not object to it because we have become accustomed to it.

There has been a debate on the future of 5G worldwide. Approaching it from a metaphysical standpoint, I contend: that in the physical universe, there are vibrations that we are all familiar with, but through 5G, the vibration has been moved to a place that is a little closer to the nonphysical or metaphysical universe side of things. Through these scientific discoveries, many things can be known in-depth about you in the future, such as how you think and your thought patterns, by sending impulse waves through you and attempting to catch your mind. Now, when you go to a website, let's say on Amazon, and search for something, through artificial intelligence, they determine what you're looking for, and then that same item begins pursuing you. And now their concept is that even if you don't go to Amazon, they should find out anything you think and try to sell you things in your mind. Thus, this 5G vibration or frequency is slightly higher than usual, or you could say bordering on the paranormal. As a result, there was a lot of disagreement over whether it should be permitted, but it's ultimately there, and the fight is still going on. The use of 5G explains that you can manage and control energy to as much extent as much as possible.

Developing, utilizing, and increasing reliance on solar energy for a natural viewpoint of life must be preferred over electrical energy. In the early days of human civilization, we simply accomplished all work during daylight hours. We then went to sleep, but that is no longer the case since our days now extend until midnight, and we cannot survive without artificial energy.

Too much energy or too little energy both amounts to negative effects. Usually, people use these two words most of the time. Positive and negative energy. The amount of energy that is exact for you is positive energy, and negative energy means too little or too much. You meet with situations or people who can be more than your acceptance level, and this kind of experience will be hard to go through, and you feel less optimistic about life. This can be energy draining and will be considered a negative impact on you. One can process such unpleasant, unpalatable experiences and get even with them. Processing means, in simple terms, not resisting but accepting. More acceptance of the environment energetically and more presence will be experienced.

Fill up your environment with all the energies which vibe well with you. It can be a song, a flower, a person, a book, or a food item. These simple things will fill your day-to-day living with enough energy to sustain.

As spiritual beings, we are more on aesthetic bands. Cleanliness brings those vibrations to us. The beauty, the art, the smells, all these amounts to accumulating positivity or positive energy in your everyday life.

The Fourth Feature of the Physical Universe is Matter

Our body exists in the form of matter, but our body's naturalness decreases as more than required matter accumulate, i.e., when we become overweight. Our body becomes less natural as we cannot perform many activities that a person with a more natural disposition can, like sway, run, and feel lighter.

I previously talked about time, which plays a role in making us the most unnatural because time is not in our control, and we are all running and chasing time as much as possible. Likewise, money is another thing that we are all chasing, and whatever amount we have, it seems insufficient. We exchange everything with money, and money makes us feel energetic, strong, and assertive. When you accumulate a large amount of matter, such as money, and that money begins to exert control over you in the same way that time exerts control over you, money exerts power over you. However, this constant want for more money pushes us towards unnaturalness. But, do we become happier by having more money? It instead brings lots of causes and concerns and worries as this in relationship with matter or energy is always cumbersome for you as a spiritual being or as a physical person.

For growth, a plant, which is a natural entity, takes only as much water as it needs. If you give more than that, it just starts wilting. Similarly, it takes as much sunlight as possible; if you give more, it again starts wilting. Likewise, we must understand that the happiness we acquire through more than required money and other materialistic things is not long-lasting and wilting starts sooner or later.

Even if you achieve the life you dreamt of in childhood, you might not feel as excited as you thought. Thus, you know that matter robs us of our naturalness; we have become less and less natural through time. And we've grown increasingly cautious in our approach to living, and we've discovered how to live well.

Nature does not need to learn; it is born with the ability to grow. For example, a plant or a seed just knows how to grow. But we also have the potential to grow and care for ourselves, but we have been trained to be unnatural by being told repeated instructions regarding the correct and wrong ways of living. We are given excessive instructions as to the right way of living, which mainly includes the conditioning that we must have matter as, without matter, we will not be known as someone who is living their dream life. However, matter in the form of big gadgets or money in the bank is also taking away your naturalness. Money is conceived as a series of numbers. You rarely come into contact with money; you see the numbers in the bank and then the numbers increasing and reducing, and if they decline, your heartbeats sink. The notion that these numbers are critical and should continue to increase rather than decrease is inherently unnatural because, in a natural cycle, things come and go, but we, for both money and time, do not want them to finish at all; we want time to continue indefinitely. However, it is critical to part with money and time. When we accept that money and time will eventually run out, it increases the naturalness of our existence. Part with money and start giving it away, even if you have less of it to enhance your naturalness. Also, pay attention to the number of clothes you possess: it is one example of living out of harmony with the physical universe. We must learn the feeling of detachment by enduring the pain and discomfort when we part with our money and other things. At present, our strongest attachment is with the matter, whether in the form of money, devices, or other materialistic items. Other entities, such as your spouse, family, and children, are also forms of matter, but it is almost impossible to detach from your family or spouse. However, you can start with things around the house and just keep what is required to grow and complete the natural cycle of life.

As a part of detachment and natural living, I've started relinquishing unnecessary things that I own, and as I look around, I wonder when I accumulated them all. And I learned that the more freely I give my belongings, the more they provide me with a new sensation. Many of the items we retain at home are simply because we believe that everything will come in use. The quantity of objects in our home continues to grow, but we merely carry their weight on our shoulders. Once you begin removing matter and creating space, you will notice how better you feel and how our naturalness returns. Sometimes, occasionally, even if a spoon goes missing, people become upset since the spoon was part of a set and the set is now incomplete. Hence, you must begin with the physical to achieve the mental condition of not being tied to matter.

I'm attempting to focus your attention on your relationship with these objects to help you determine if you are the master of them or whether they are your master. But, as soon as you have mastery over these tangible objects, you begin to sense that freedom. By examining the interaction between money, matter, energy, and time, you may gradually disentangle yourself, increasing the naturalness of living. Similarly, you must be aware that food also matter, and dependency on any type of food, wine, or tea is also your weakness. So, all you have to do is recognize your reliance on it and then begin observing, inspecting, and eventually breaking free from it. I am not endorsing that you must not have gadgets or money or other things you're used to living with. The main idea is to inspect and determine who controls what and who is the owner. For instance, is time or money controlling you? Are your gadgets controlling you? Is your family controlling you? Are you simply the effect of all these entities of matter? Because when you become an effect of everything, you don't grow naturally; you simply exist, but existence by itself is dead. Surviving and thriving are natural because nature exists and expands in abundance. If you're trying to save time and money to live, you're acting artificially and unnaturally. But this has become your original thought pattern or way of living because we have gone so far away from the natural state of our being.

Nobody can explain precisely what it means to live a natural life. Natural living is innate in all beings; we all possess an innate wisdom that may be accessed by connecting with our innermost selves to experience the freedom that comes with being natural, but it will require time and daily effort. Find out what's going on inside of you by connecting with yourself. If you are watchful, the outcomes will be worth the wait, even though the process will be gradual and steady.

CHAPTER 3

Nourish Naturally

A human being in the human form is confused with food. It is hard to say whether flood has consumed human beings or vice versa. Food is one of the main stimuli to live. We live in a stimulus-response relation with food. Certain foods excite us, and certain food inhibits us. We are constantly thinking about food. What to cook, how much, and how? Once consumed, the conflict in digesting and ejecting. Different variations of food, gluten-free, keto, fat-free. Food has confused the spiritual compass. These confusions show up in discussions in groups and get together. Generally asking each other what is the right food one should be consuming. I can see the insanity developing over the centuries.

In the earlier times of civilization, man was hunting food, eating food, and eating kept him busy. He will hunt and will eat whatever he gets. Over time he started hunting what he wanted and that brought attachment to a particular kind of food. He will hunt his choicest food and will save for the rainy day. In this process, his lifestyle started changing, and his goal in life changed from hunting and eating to hunting desirable food, cooking it elaborately, and saving for the future. This brought pleasure and pain. The pleasure of fulfilling the desire and the pain of losing that sensation after some time. Desire to have the same pleasure over and over caught one in hunting more and more options, eating more elaborately, and saving in large proportions. This complicated the lifestyle further, which we see all around now. Attachment to food brings pleasure and pain, two sides of the same coin. Observe this self-inflicted pleasure and pain sensations from food. The pleasure of eating, the pain of overeating, the pleasure of eating to your heart's desire, and the pain of not getting enough food.

It is all complicated now.

Make it simple; observe what you eat.

Feel gratitude for whatever you get.
Eat to live, take time to chew, sit undistracted with your food and eat with your hands. Feel the connection with your stomach and soul. You will remain eternally hungry if you do not add these ingredients to your food.
Spiritual food is completely effortless. One does not have to work so hard to fulfill spiritual hunger. Love, connectedness, and oneness are the essential food for the spirit. The spirit is the essence of livingness. Food made without love or served without love lacks the essential nourishment. Yoga is an ancient science that helps a human being to connect with its spiritual counterpart.

WHAT IS YOGA?
Yoga does not mean bodily postures or exercises. Yoga means paving the path of spiritualism. It is choosing the path of greater truth. Understanding life's journey and creating a balance in different parts of it. It is a spiritual discipline. Discipline to get to the reality of this apparent world. If one does not follow the discipline, one gets distracted by the appearance of the physical universe, which is not the real deal.
Yoga encourages the science of meditation. Meditation means silence within and silence from the outer noise. This silence spreads in the consciousness. Silence is the first step of meditation. Disconnecting from the senses of the physical world and being with yourself. Let quietness takes over. These are the basics of meditation.

Everyone has a unique reality that he has created over time. He has created his puzzle, and only he can solve it. Being silent, being mindful, or being meditative is the same thing. One does not need to add on more but sort out what already exists.
Yoga is a very ancient science. Yoga means the harmonious flow of energy. When the harmony breaks, the energy gets dispersed and disturbed. It gets locked in various body parts or on emotional levels. One does not move ahead with the locked-up energy. It needs to be released to be in its original native state. It was derived from the source or the lord or God.

Have you ever seen a river merging with the ocean? Before it merges, it becomes quiet, slow, and meditative and just merges into the vibrant, joyous ocean. This union is the union, and this is Yoga. Going back to the origin in a peaceful meditative way, undisturbed, calm.

Be a Yogi, live like a Yogi, end this life like a yogi, and finally merge with the ocean.

Eternal union is Yoga.

Yoga is spiritual food. It fulfills the desire to exist energetically and immortally. Yoga helps to activate the body from the sleeping mode to the awakened state, which is the real basics of living. Live in the awakened state.

Conscious living does include conscious eating. Have food when you are hungry. Drink water when you are thirsty. Live consciously and be aware of what you are eating, how, and when.

A typical day from morning to night sets up the body rhythm and listens to it. Ask your body what food does it want? How much does it want? Do not bypass the body's intelligence and learn from what it tells you. Being in harmony with the body brings the energy needed to remain in balance with the physical body.

What Is Aromatherapy?

Aromatherapy is the practice of using essential oils for therapeutic benefit. Aromatherapy has been used for centuries. When inhaled, the scent molecules in essential oils travel from the olfactory nerves directly to the brain and especially impact the amygdala, the emotional center of the brain.

Aromatherapy might have health benefits, including:

- Relief from anxiety and depression.
- Improved quality of life, particularly for people with chronic health conditions.

Various parts of plants are usually used to extract essential oils for aromatherapy. It is possible to breathe in the highly concentrated oils directly or indirectly, or apply them to the skin through massage, lotions, or bath salts.

An ideal way to explain aromatherapy is by stimulating the nose's smell receptors, which then communicate with the brain, which controls emotions. There are many essential oils in their purest form to name them a few are: Lavender oil, Frankincense oil, Peppermint oil, Eucalyptus oil, Lemon grass oil, Tea tree oil, Rosemary oil, Orange oil, etc.

The oldest nourishment system is Ayurveda, a natural system of medicine that originated in India more than 3,000 years ago. Sanskrit words Ayur (life) and Veda (science) are the roots of the term Ayurveda. Ayurveda is thus considered a system of life knowledge.

Ayurvedic medicine (“Ayurveda” for short) is one of the world's oldest holistic (“whole-body”) healing systems. It's based on the belief that health and wellness depend on a delicate balance between the mind, body, and spirit. This delicate balance Ayurveda believes that the entire universe is composed of five elements: Vayu (Air), Jala (Water), Aakash (Space or ether), Prithvi (Earth), and Teja (Fire).

The concepts of universal interconnectedness, the body's constitution (prakriti), and life forces (doshas) are the primary basis of ayurvedic medicine. Goals of treatment aid the person by eliminating impurities, reducing symptoms, increasing disease resistance, reducing worry, and increasing harmony in life.

CHAPTER 4

Who You Are?

Be in Tune with Yourself and Own Who You Are.

The following thoughts are from a talk I delivered to a group of individuals as a part of my online lecture series. I never deliver a discussion or talk till I walk that talk. Whatever I say in my discussions is what I've experienced: first, I get to that state; then, I deliver a talk or engage in discussion on the matter. Otherwise, it doesn't come to me. And this, I believe, should be the obligation of someone delivering a talk or asserting that if they know something, they should have applied it and speak from experience. I sincerely believe that you will feel a transformation within you as you read this chapter because you most certainly will resonate with what is put forward.

In my quest for self-realization and discovering who I truly am, I came across a subject that is frequently overlooked and avoided for the sake of simplicity and courtesy: accepting ownership of all your acts, deeds, and qualities. However, what we fail to notice is that not taking ownership of these acts, deeds, and qualities stops us from exploring our potential and recognizing who we are. For humility, we have been taught to forsake ownership of our accomplishments and good deeds in our minds. But in my view, we must start doing it to find out who we truly are. No matter how long it takes, we must develop the practice of taking ownership of our achievements and accomplishments.

Experience the feeling of owning your achievements and virtues.

For instance, when I wanted to be proud of my accomplishments, my mother told me not to be too pleased because things never go according to plan. The thought that we should not be too pleased with our accomplishments since 'things never go as planned is so deeply ingrained in our minds that we lose confidence in our abilities and accomplishments. This makes us think that we will not be able to accomplish them again. We also commonly hear that we must feel lesser about ourselves as there is always scope for improvement.

Likely, the feeling you do not want to achieve more is because someone told you not to be proud of what you've done. This makes you disregard and ignore what you've done. It can also be because people convince you you lack the necessary capabilities and competencies. What's worse is that you might have let yourself accept it because you're not sure of yourself. However, we must keep in mind that recognition of your life's accomplishments, assets, and capabilities takes considerable time. Getting used to owning your achievements is like moving from a tiny apartment to a big house: it takes time to get used to it.

In retrospect, I realized I wasn't letting myself experience the happiness I could have felt because of my accomplishments. Even though I would thank those who congratulated me, I never let myself feel what I had accomplished. I realized, however, that we must take some time to reflect on what others say about us and allow that feeling to sink in. We need to stop denying ourselves praise from others, and we should be proud of what we have accomplished in our lives.

As well as absorbing compliments, we must develop the ability to respond to them. When someone compliments you on your appearance at a party, you must allow the compliment to sink in. Sometimes, people admire us because they feel compelled to, but the truth is that we fail to take our admiration seriously. In my opinion, if you do not take ownership of things, nobody else will let you take ownership. You must completely own your space for others to recognize it as yours. When you own your space, you communicate to the world that you belong, that you believe in your worth, and that you provide every chance for yourself to shine. This allows people to build a favorable opinion of you. You must mentally own your accomplishments because only when you own them will you be able to get rid of other people’s apprehensions about you and feel secure and confident in yourself.

So, once you start taking ownership, your tendency to be complacent and feel unconfident will decrease.

When you achieve your goals

Own your achievements and Appreciate Yourself for Your Success

Owning your achievements increases your confidence that you can achieve them again

If you build the confidence that you can achieve them again, you will continually strive to keep achieving more and more. But, if you don't appreciate yourself and own your success, not only will you lose your confidence, but you also start taking things casually because of being afraid of failure.

You must spend some time alone with yourself and allow yourself to experience all of the wonderful events in your life. By taking ownership, you will see how much your mindset changes and how much your sleepiness, exhaustion, and sluggishness, which come from being disconnected from yourself, start to go away. I still want to do more and have a new objective in life now and then, which I work diligently to reach. Despite having accomplished many objectives and goals, I believe there is still more work. Your self-confidence earned from your achievements keeps you going.

Don't forget to own your contributions to others

Many times, in our lives, we feel that we have helped people around us and sacrificed our interests to provide them with comfort, but being humble reminds us not to focus on the sacrifices we have made. Even when someone reminds us of the assistance, we have given others, we answer, "I did nothing; it is only God's grace." However, I realized that I needed to start embracing the feeling of successfully helping others and feeling those emotions as much as I wanted to. To adhere to what we've been taught, I likewise refrained from taking ownership of the things I'd done. Rather, people make us focus on the things we did incorrectly rather than on what we did correctly.

For example, you assist someone in finding the right employment, overcoming severe challenges, and bringing about a good transformation in his/her life. Most in such cases, we prefer not to take credit for the help we've offered to others. Instead, we ascribe everything to God, stating that everything happened due to God's will.

We're taught to be modest and grounded and to abstain from taking ownership of the things we've done for others. But you must understand this: feelings of not being thanked might make you feel low and uneasy. This is something we have to let go of. How do we part with such emotions?

To part with such emotions that trigger thoughts and ruin our health, we must feel complete ownership, just as we feel complete possession of our house. You can't give up these feelings until you feel like you own the fact that you made a difference in someone's life. Only an owner can part with his belongings and give them to others. Similarly, you must begin to possess the feeling of being of value to part with the feelings of uneasiness and feeling you get from not being thanked enough or credited enough.

However, at the same time, this does not imply that he must carry a banner outside and proudly display our achievements in front of everyone. Because a real owner doesn't publicize the ownership, only when we do not truly possess something do we go out of our way to tell everyone about it. To feel a sense of ownership for helping others, we must fully experience the happiness we feel after helping them.

Do Not Downgrade Yourself Out of Fear of Offending Others

Humility demands us to present ourselves as equal or less than others. We tend to stay the same as everyone else in our social circle, so everyone else feels alike. Our standards are lowered to make someone else feel good. I did it several times before I realized that I avoided showing my full potential just because other people would not like it. As a result, I held back on expressing my abilities.

We are taught that for every circumstance in our life, no matter how insignificant, we must maintain neutrality and not outshine others. For example, someone admires your beautiful hair. We tend to respond with, "No, yours are superior to mine" because we just strive to be on an equal footing with everyone else or want to be accepted. We do not recognize how essential it is to express and explore our uniqueness because doing so will bring an unparalleled, exceptional, and unique perspective rather than simply attempting to be like everyone else. For instance, when I was studying music, I started singing in a different voice in the hope of singing more melodiously, abandoning my uniqueness. It was apparent that my music instructor was dissatisfied with me, stating that if I sang in my natural voice, my voice would sound more melodious. My life was transformed by taking music lessons. I thought I couldn't sing because I didn't have a pleasant voice. When I began to embrace my voice, it became therapeutic for me.

Once You Know What You Want, No One Else Can Make You Change Your Mind

Holding on to our uniqueness also reminds me of an incident that my music teacher experienced while training to become a musician. The music teacher was pursuing his studies to become an engineer when he discovered he wanted to become a musician. He began playing at get-togethers and parties where people appreciated and admired his voice. He finally quit his studies to venture full-time into music. After quitting his studies, he went to a teacher he admired. The teacher instructed him to master the basic notes and return to him after one month. When the disciple returned to the teacher and recited the practiced notes, the teacher tricked him by singing in the reverse order. The disciple could not hold on to his tune and changed according to the teacher's reverse notes. Seeing this, the teacher informed the disciple that he had failed in his effort and instructed him to practice for another month before returning. When the teacher tried to trick the disciple by singing in reverse notes, the disciple did not change his tune and continued with his practiced notes. Now teacher was convinced that the disciple's tune would not change by the external influences. This illustrates that once you know what is true for you, then no one can change it. But when our truth is not balanced, we go off guard with any new disruption at the drop of a hat,

We must be in tune with ourselves and Own Who We Are by expressing to ourselves the qualities that others have not allowed us to believe. Express and Experience things that you are capable of.

Express the Good in You and Accept That You Strive for Pleasure

There are various types of energy, including heat energy, light energy, and sound energy. Each of us is also a sort of energy. And one of the properties of energy is that it travels; the bulb illuminates when turned on; the pot heats up when placed on the stove, and the lamp glows when turned on. Similarly, life energy travels in a linear and physical form. We must never forget that our physical form has life energy which is represented by the glow in our eyes, the blushing of our cheeks, and by the smile on our faces. We can easily feel our life energy, and merely thinking about it can energize us and make us feel more energetic, confident, and optimistic.

We rarely hear people discussing the influence of the positive energy they sense within themselves. For instance, you may feel wonderful about your inherent kindness. Your good feelings must be expressed in this situation, allowing them to flow freely. Our positive traits and positive energies can only be fully expressed when we can express our positive feelings about ourselves properly. And, most crucially, you must resist the temptation to believe that good things do not last forever and that happiness is short-lived.

If we begin to pay attention to these natural impulses, we will no longer be bound by the past or the future and will be able to experience the now regardless of what is going on around us. We must recognize that nothing lasts forever and envision ourselves as a conduit through which everything flows gently regardless of any external situation.

Helping others and making the world a better place to live is an important element of being a good human being. And, to show ourselves as helping individuals, we reject the notion that we must continually act in ways that maximize satisfaction and provide pleasure to our five sense organs. The truth, though, is that everyone seeks pleasure. Many individuals on the path to spiritual enlightenment are concerned and continue to wonder if they can alleviate the suffering of others around the world and make everyone happy. For me, it is like an act that has to be put on for the sake of being on the path of spiritual enlightenment.

I strongly believe that we are here on earth in our physical form to have experiences; experiencing is the primary reason for existence, and seriousness and solemnity are fundamentally opposed to existence.

CHAPTER 5

What You Are Destined to!!!!

Let's now talk about an unresolvable concept that has engrossed the minds of mankind forever: Destiny. Some believe in destiny, others don't. However, whether one believes in destiny or not, at some point in our lives, most people wonder why particular incidents happen in life over which we have no control. Most people believe that whatever happens, happens, so we should not worry about it in advance.

We spend our lives cautiously ensuring that we make appropriate decisions at an appropriate time. But if we look at our lives, did everything happen the way we wanted it to be?

No, it just happened the way it had to happen.

When we see the lives of people around us, we observe that despite being cautious, their life took its turn, which they did not expect.

But what happens when you encounter a life incident you didn't expect?

You simply learn to adjust accordingly because whatever comes to you, you learn to stand up to it, bear it, remember to face it, and then it doesn't matter. We go with the flow of life, and this is natural living. But, in my perspective, I believe that we do have control over our life and we can change the course and direction of our life. But how? For this, we need to understand what Karma is and how our approach affects our life.

In life, we've all heard if you do good acts, good karma will reward you. If you do bad acts, bad karma will punish you.

Several prominent Indian saints have written books on karma. The wisdom shared by the saints and philosophers is so vast that the reader is overwhelmed by the vast expanse of their knowledge, and hence, most such books become bestsellers. Although it seems enlightening, the answers one gets from them are quite complicated. My question for the reader is, what is the take-home message from these books?

Because the majority of answers one receives are quite complicated, the purpose of this discussion is to present readers with an easy take on Karma and how they can find solutions easily to the problems they face in life.

Karma has been used to motivate good deeds, and people understand karma differently. The Hindu philosophy is entirely centered on karma, which means that they should do whatever they can to create good karma, and if they create bad karma, they will suffer the repercussions. It is good karma, for example, if you feed the poor or cross a blind man's path. The purpose of good karma is to constantly do good deeds so that one day you are rewarded. But when you do bad karma by doing something that shouldn't be done, you spend your entire life defending yourself. For example, when you tell lies, to make yourself believe that your lie is actually for the betterment of many people and is not bad karma, you keep defending yourself.

In conclusion, we must aim at accumulating good karma to profit from it in the future. As I thought about the idea, I thought about the connections I've made with people throughout this life. I had envisioned the relationships developing a certain way, but they didn't. All the actions I took in that relationship produced no results. We all face such situations in life. What happens when things like this happen over and over again?

When we repeatedly try for things to go a certain way and they don't, we give up and stop caring about it. Hence, we start saying: I'm mature. I have learned life's lessons.

When I thought about the concept of Karma, I looked at all the relationships I've had in this lifetime. You must do that too. When you look at those relationships, you see how complicated they are: They may have ended abruptly or didn't go where you wanted them to, like getting married to the person you liked or getting along well with your sibling. There are a lot of things that you expected to happen, but they didn't. It completely changes your way of thinking about living, so you just become apathetic about life, and you handle things as they come. Likewise, I looked at different parts of my life where things did not materialize the way I wanted.

That was a little upsetting. Do you know why?

As the concept of karma states that you always get what you give, it made me wonder if things didn't materialize the way I wanted them to because of my 'karma' (my past actions). In other words, if it did not happen the way I wanted, I was responsible for it. We've all thought something similar when we don't get what we want. thinking leads to more thoughts and one gets lost in thoughts.

Instead of thinking if I look at those different memories of my relationship, the memories started going away: they didn't catch my attention anymore. I got bored of looking at them. Then I thought about the present, which allowed those memories of the past to fade. And I asked myself, "Why do you want to hold on to all those memories?"

Realizing this wasn't a small achievement for me. It was a big achievement for me in the sense that we keep all those memories and call them experiences and wish to learn from those experiences for our future needs.

We do not need these memories or karma to dictate our future, there is some frequency of energy around us that can help us learn how to act wisely. The only thing you have to do is tune in and ask yourself, " Which way of acting would satisfy me?"

If you ask this question, the universe will tell you the exact answer, no matter your problem. Sometimes the universe will take a while to give you the right answer, and you may get several answers that don't seem to make sense. If you don't get the right answer, you just have to tell the universe, "That was the wrong answer. What is the correct answer?" And, you will see the right answer coming to you.

Also, you must remember that whenever you act, it should be effortless and energetically aligned. If it is not aligned, you experience a wide range of emotions such as why, how, when, and what your emotions are in response to a prior incident, experience, or relationship. And then you try to find answers in our past, which is past karma.

However, I do not believe that such a thing exists. What exists is the knowledge present in the universe, which you can access anytime. When you start using it, it will give you multiple answers, just like Google, but you need to figure out which one is the right one. A simple answer that aligns with the question is the right answer.

Understanding Karma Through the Path of Least Resistance

Taking the Buddha's path of least resistance, let us now understand Karma. Before enlightenment, Buddha experienced separation from himself, which he called illusion or Maya. He realized that he could not be free until the illusion was removed. His illusion, however, made him feel as though he were nothing without it. He became the Buddha, the enlightened, only after the illusion was removed. A fable states that after he gained enlightenment, his enemy once shot at him with arrows, but when they struck him, the arrows turned into flowers. The reason for this is that he offered no resistance.

However, this is not how we react to our everyday lives. When something occurs, or someone says something to you, you respond with resistance, hoping to escape, deflect, or prepare for what is approaching. The things you have made and the opinions you have formed about yourself, the universe, the sun, the moon, and the earth make up the illusion, and karma is that illusion. As long as you believe in karma, these eventually become your karma. The beliefs you have formed about yourself become firmly enshrined in your subconscious mind and start controlling your actions and your life.

'Karma': The Cycle

In the cycle of karma, if you do an action and it is completed, it becomes enlightenment or wisdom, and it is part of the universe. Incomplete actions, which don't go according to plan, become dispersed energy, which makes no sense, and you spend your entire life trying to make sense of it. There is wholeness and wisdom in the universe. All the knowledge exists here in this universe, and nothing goes anywhere. To get the answer, you must be quiet and in alignment with the universe to tune in and get that knowledge. It's only a question of being in the present and not thinking about what happened in the past. But, if you're never here or in the present moment, you miss the beauty of ever-present knowledge and wisdom.

Every time I have a question in my mind, I tune in, and I receive an answer. Similarly, all of us are conduits for knowledge.

Karma is used as a marketing tool.

Karma books are bestsellers. There is a lot of interest in reading, understanding, and commenting on it. Why not take your time to find the answer from within if the question is in you and the answer is in you? Who else can tell what is good and what is bad for you? Having more wisdom does not require you to go anywhere. All of us are endowed with wisdom. As a whole, we are complete.

If you have A problem or situation for which you need a solution, all you have to do is ask the universe for the right answer. At some point or another, we all do it. The knowledge you seek will come to you as you follow this path. You don't need to go to other mentors, teachers, or books since they gather it from the universe and customize it to suit their style.

How is it that when we read a book, we relate closely to its meaning and feel that it applies to us? It happens because we have inherent wisdom within us, which makes us feel one with the answer.

In my opinion, 'karma' or 'what goes around, comes around is used by people to scare or control others. If you strongly believe in this, it does happen, and if you do not, then it does not. Simple.

When people have good karma, they feel proud of themselves. Sitting quietly and listening to the accomplishments of people who have performed good karma is a good way of getting to know them. But every time someone talks about their good karma to people, for instance, about the people they have helped in the past, it means that they are in the past and not in the present. The mere thought of doing good karma ends the motive of doing good actions. In my view, karma is what one does in the present time, becoming a part of the universe's infinite knowledge.

Buddha could decompose and recompose. Likewise, we all have that power in us if we are in the present time.

It doesn't matter whether it's good or bad karma; in both cases, you get stuck in your past and can't move forward by analyzing, thinking, or feeling proud of your past actions.

Harness the Power and Wisdom Within You

It is important to realize that you have this power and wisdom. Understanding this brings you freedom and certainty that knowledge and solutions will be available when you need them. But there are filters around you that stop you from receiving these answers. When you get an answer, you don't accept it readily as you don't trust the answer you have received. We distrust the answers we receive because we have learned to question, object, and compare everything we come across. For example, suppose you are searching for a car and have a particular type in your mind. While searching, you find many offers but you still do not find the exact car you are looking for. Finally, because you didn't give up, you will find the exact car you were looking for at the same price. The same thing happens if you are looking for a house and find the exact house you were looking for, both in terms of price and location. How does that happen? This is a contribution by the universe, because it knows you more than you know yourself.

Additionally, since we are part of the universe, there is always an exchange of information between us. Therefore, whatever wisdom you learn is simply absorbed into the universe. In this way, knowledge continues to circulate.

In What Form Does the Universe Exist?

According to some people, the universe doesn't exist, and our emotions aren't real either, but it feels like it exists because of our thoughts and actions. To them, I would say this: If we look at the internet. Does it have a form? No, you cannot see the form of the internet, but the internet is an energy transferring from one cable to another. The same goes for energy. You can see it exists only when the bulb lights up. Those are the imprints of energy particles that come to you. Nobody has to define it or give a name to it. But that's how we always feel- because of ever-changing waves or frequencies. You feel that energy coming into you when you stand in the Sun, which you call heat energy. A plant takes it, grows up, and changes into fruit or seed. Knowledge, experience, and wisdom gained by people are eventually written in books and are read in those books.

If You Look at Yourself and Think About Who You Are, Do You Think You've Done Good or Bad Karma?

The first lesson we need to learn is that people forget all their actions, no matter how good or bad after they complete them and return to the present time. They know what they've done, but the action is over before they realize how good or bad it was. This tendency to not think about an action after it has been completed, whether good or bad, is a natural state of being.

We go through various steps every time we act, but once it is complete, it no longer exists. However, we keep reminding ourselves about it, writing it down, or taking pictures of it to make it permanent. As a result, we become absorbed in action we have taken.

It's easy for people to get caught up in the illusions they've created for themselves. It has been difficult for me to break free from the illusions I have created for myself. Whenever I feel proud of how well I understand any meaning or concept I've been aiming to understand, I remind myself that such a feeling, too, is an illusion. Nevertheless, every time I comprehend life's meaning, I feel lighter. In fact, as I become lighter, I realize just how light I can become. Each day we compare our perception of life with the day before. Our way of thinking is evolving every day.

How do you define bad karma?

I We won't use the terms 'good karma' or 'bad karma'. Whenever you regret doing something after you've done it, it gets stuck in your head and must therefore be avoided. The act of convincing yourself that an action is right and struggling to accept that it was the right one is not something you should engage in. When you resist accepting actions you've done or any action that irritates or bothers you, it has a non-essential value and gets stuck in your mind. Obviously, this shouldn't be the case, and these actions should be avoided.

Are there instances in which we act in a way that benefits us, such as negotiating with someone to lower the price of a certain item?

For instance, if you tricked someone and bought a car from him for a lesser price, you start wanting more such things from the universe. This becomes a normal thing for you because you feel that as everybody does it, there is nothing wrong in it. If you do not fully process the energy of manipulation, it will circle in your head and become the norm: You must remember that whatever energy you are on, you bring the same energy back over and over. You will pull in people thos who manipulate you and harass you. This will further your belief in it being normal process and you will never be able to come out of this vicious circle.

Coming back to how energy influences your actions, I suggest: that you must balance your energy to be able to make the right decision and take appropriate actions. This balance means getting to the state of zero, the state of least resistance. And the state of least resistance is being 'here' in the present. Being 'here' in sync with the energy all around. We can spend our time talking about the proof of energy's existence, regardless of whether it exists or not. However, here it goes beyond simply proving it to anyone, it's between you and the universe, since you are just a part of it. There is no separation between you and the universe.

In a state of zero action, the action is neither good nor bad. The action is simply over. As long as you keep thinking about it, you will always be forced to justify it, whether it is good or bad. In order for something to happen over and over again, you need to repeat the same thing over and over again.

CHAPTER 6

Embrace Your Natural State of Being

Notice the Unnatural Behaviour Patterns You've Acquired Unconsciously and without analyzing.

The words 'Being natural' or 'Natural Living' have been used so often that it has lost their freshness. What does it mean to live naturally? However, do we truly have an innate desire to live in the most natural way possible? Most likely, we do not. Though nature keeps changing every day and we resist those changes by altering temperatures, soil, air, and water. Our daily schedules are fixed and do not change with the changing natural cycles. To derive the pleasure of natural living, we must embark on a journey we cannot enjoy until we have completed it. And to embrace natural living, you should begin by analyzing your patterns, your behavior patterns, and determining what changes can be made to your daily habits.

Understand and Accept Your Natural Self

Own your natural existence. You are one of a kind. This makes it easier for others to understand your nature and behavior, and you don't have to behave differently with people in different circumstances. The people around you do not have to guess how you will behave either. You may have to learn how to change your behavior in different situations, forcing yourself to conform to a certain way of acting/behaving if you don't naturally do so.

To be natural, we must be able to express how we feel. If someone says to me: I'm going to share something with you, please don't feel bad about it. I simply respond to such a statement by saying: if it makes me feel bad, I'll feel bad. I can't pretend that I don't feel bad about it.

This is one way to be yourself because you don't compromise with what makes you 'You'. And people around you must accept you in your natural sense.

At first, it can be difficult to see and understand your true self. My natural self, for example, doesn't like talking a lot. My natural tendency is to be quiet. It's common to feel distant from a conversation when sitting with a group, watching a movie, or having people over. Yet most of the time, we just keep yapping and acting similarly to them, awaiting the conversation to end. To me, simplicity is to say that I cannot continue talking. My honest statement is that I am unable to continue talking. Understanding and accepting your natural self does not mean that you will strain your relationships with other people. On the contrary, it helps you figure out how you're returning to yourself.

But, how do we know we are on a journey towards natural living? And how do we know that we have achieved that state of being?

Its pleasure will be subtle because you can observe how far you have progressed from your everyday life after a week or 15 days. It will not appear dazzling and lustrous; rather, it will be subtle and emerge naturally and instinctively. And when you look back at yourself, you will notice how much you have changed and evolved into your true self. Because you are naturally that way, it will not appear new to you. When you do something unnatural, such as installing air conditioning in your home that makes you feel cool or hot the way you choose, you are experiencing newness. Similarly, trying new foods or doing new experiments adds to the novelty. But the journey toward natural living will not seem new to you because that's how you naturally are.

How can you know that you have reached your natural state of being?
Natural living might seem very tedious to you: you don't have any cravings; you don't feel like being in one place and another. You simply sit there and smile. I can't express it in words.
When you reach the state of natural living, you will realize how much effort it takes for you to be unnatural. The more natural you become, the more effort it takes to become unnatural. You will see how hard it is to become unnatural when you reach this point. The way you laughed at someone when you did not want to laugh, for example, or welcomed someone who came to your home even though you did not feel like welcoming them, will make you think about how unnatural you were. In other words, you will embrace a stoic state of existence. When you realize your natural state of being, you observe yourself and make your standards, not influenced by external factors.

To Explore Your Natural State, Raise Your Comfort Standards at a Higher Bar
Additionally, to further explore your natural state, raise the awareness of your standards to set a higher bar. In other words, whenever you think you have found your state and feel comfortable about it, move to the next level. But, how will you do that?
When you are in the zone where you feel at ease, you must pay attention to your body and determine which portion of it is strained. Your mind will be unable to recognize the tension, even if your body feels it because your mind has been programmed to function in this manner. The body may be harboring stress and pressure. Still, the mind may be fooled into thinking that you are in a state of relaxation, even while you are smiling and expressing that you are having a wonderful time. But, in reality, our body and mind are out of harmony. This is the time to heighten our consciousness of who we are and our awareness of the disconnection from the mind. This is when we must re-evaluate the benchmarks, we have established for ourselves. Because we are deceived into believing we are in a comfortable zone when, in fact, we are not. We need to increase the bar for what constitutes comfort and get more comfortable than ever before. Here is a straightforward exercise that will allow you to understand that you can raise your comfort standards:

Allow your shoulders to relax.

Do you feel at ease?

Allow yourself to relax a little more.

Are you certain this is it?

Consider relaxing slightly more. You may have the impression that this is it. However, this will not be the case. Each time, you will feel more at ease.

We put our bodies through so much stress that we may believe it is normal. And when you begin to realize and return to your natural condition, you will be in a blissful state you have never known before. It is a state in which you are not in a hurry or rush; instead, you simply appreciate your journey.

Communicating My Realisation to Youth

As I contemplated my life, I had an ecstatic moment: I felt I had accomplished my life goals. Momentarily, the thought flashed through my mind. I then saw a picture in my head of a bird perched on a tree and wondered if I was that bird. In most cases, birdwatchers observe that birds just sit on a branch and do nothing. The choice not to fly is theirs. My feelings at that moment were similar; I could accomplish anything. Even though I know how to do it, I do not wish to do it. In realizing that an animal won't eat if it doesn't want to, and a bird won't fly if it doesn't want to, I saw myself returning to natural living without attachments. I felt like a bird who is completely present in the moment. As most young people work hard to achieve their goals, I must not bother them with my realization. To reach this conclusion, they must go through the whole process. Wouldn't it be easy to realize this beforehand and then go through all these phases?

Experiencing Consciousness Beyond Earth

Once we start living naturally, we keep reaching milestones one after another. It's a milestone for me to achieve the sensations on Earth. As I unfold and experience my being in the universe, I'll reach the next milestone. My perception is limited to Earth, a part of the infinite cosmos, but I wish to know what it's like to be an integral part of it.

To To summarize, I would like to reiterate a belief central to my being: We are vibrating and pulsating units of energy with tremendous potential. It is easy for me to see myself vibrating on this energy, simply experiencing bliss and laughing at trivial circumstances that we consider important.

Upon reaching the next milestone, I am certain I will not be able to describe how I feel.

A journey into nothingness

My reflections on the path reveal how much I have untangled and unlearned about different modes of expressing, articulating, and thinking. Throughout my lifetime, I have been preoccupied with a variety of topics. I am being called upon to release them at this time. It seems as if I am heading into nothingness. At this point, I am prepared to let go of the many thoughts that have persisted in my mind throughout my life. My natural state of being has yet to be adequately described by adjectives. You have likely experienced this feeling of being natural at some point in your life since we have all experienced it.

CHAPTER 7

Embracing "Nothingness"

Should there be a necessity always to create? Can't I just be myself and not a creator?

Every one of us is on a journey, but we fail to acknowledge it. The thought crossed my mind while we were walking on the beach this week. As we walked forward, my son asked why were we going forward since we would have to walk back the same distance again. I pondered over and questioned myself: From the reference point of my journey's start, how long will it take to go back? The contemplation of my journey revealed a thought-provoking yet uncomplicated understanding of life.

Throughout our lives, we act out a drama on this planet, which is like a stage. The kind of life you lead is entirely your creation. Like Shakespeare said, "All the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely players: they have their exits and entrances; and one man in his time plays many parts". We all are constantly building the script of our life plans, always planning the next step we must take. The constant movement forward, however, prevents us from realizing we need to come back to achieve a blissful state of mind. As we go deeper into this drama of life, it takes longer to come back. But if we've exhausted all our energy moving forward, will we have enough energy to come back?

Further, I share the insightful yet straightforward perspective on life that I learned during the course of my spiritual awakening.

The first step towards this new spiritual understanding is to realize that we can start our journey backwards when our lives are running smoothly, with minimal complications. We cannot focus on this spiritual understanding when faced with problems because they divert our energy. To experience a spiritual awakening in life, we need to acknowledge that it occurs when your life is running smoothly, and you feel content and satisfied.

You should also keep in mind that you need to take one step further every day. Just as when we cross one mountain, only then do we see the next - on your spiritual journey, when you feel you have ultimately settled down, you encounter the next dimension that needs your consideration. You must remember that this confirms the steady progress of your spiritual journey! For instance, when I started feeling that the dimension of love- experiencing love, giving love and being in love, was an essential portion of the spiritual journey, the dimension of 'nothingness- on being nothing' surfaced. Initially, I didn't wish to leave the love dimension, which was intoxicating and made me feel vivified. Still, I wasn't able to stabilize on the love dimension. Closing my eyes, I struck on "nothingness", which gave me a feeling of unease, but I kept pursuing that feeling of nothingness. During this nothingness, my thoughts transgressed over innumerable deliberations over various life dimensions and then returned to nothingness.

So, I just saw myself moving from nothing to these myriad thoughts over the different dimensions of life. That moment, I realized: we all are nothing, but then we are trying to be something- be something, become something. And to accomplish it, we keep creating something incessantly. We constantly alternate between episodes of "creation" and "nothingness".

We all are nothing, but we attempt to be something, be someone, or become someone by striving for different things in life.

Looking at a group of people getting together for dinner, I observed that everybody in the group supposed that they were supposed to talk about something, be it Covid 19, real estate or the job market. How unnerving would it be if the group is asked to sit without discussing anything! Whenever we are expected to do nothing and say nothing, an uneasy feeling arises.

In get-togethers or discussions like these, it is common to notice that people at no point wish to take a pause, and a moment of nothingness seems like an awkward silence. To avoid this awkwardness, people keep the conversation going, responding promptly to the previous sentence spoken by someone, irrespective of its actual need. However, in this process, most people are not listening to each other. The prompt and eager responses to every sentence that is being spoken signify the obsession we have to create something or the other. I call this inability to sit to nothingness as "creations". We are constantly creating one thing or the other as we build our lives, conversing with one another, going through different stages of our lives, meeting different sorts of people, and going to different places. As soon as we step out of this constant creation, we encounter nothingness.

Creation Versus Nothingness

During this journey, I felt a need to settle down to nothingness and be face to face with a void- I wished to see nothingness in me. I wanted to be comfortable in "nothingness". But does this nothingness signify "hollowness"? or is this nothingness "complete in itself"?

Just take a moment and think about it.

Although we are all familiar with nothingness, there is a constant urge to create. During this period of nothingness, I ask myself: Am I supposed to create? Should there be a necessity always to create? Can't I just be myself and not a creator?

I thought that if I became the creator, I would have to know the mathematics of creation to keep everything in balance. To be a creator seemed like I'd got all the cares of the world on my shoulder, and like the creator of this magnificent universe, it would be my duty to put everything in balance. The nature around – the sun, the earth, the moon, and everything around us is in balance. I wondered that if I had to be a creator, I would need to astonish the world with the extent of my exemplary creations.

Our day starts with a period of nothingness as when we wake up, we sit down and marvel at the morning sun. However, very quickly we involve ourselves in the process of creation, engaging ourselves in doing so throughout the day. At the end of the day, we encounter darkness and once again a period of "nothingness". But do we face this "nothingness"? No!

We resist this "nothingness", which we should not because that is who we are. In this "nothingness", we need to question ourselves: Who am I?

So how do you get to nothingness?

The state of being nothing is simply being yourself, just existing. A complete unit in yourself, with no urge or desire to be something or create anything.
If we do an action unintentionally or unwillingly, not expecting anything, can this be called "nothingness"?
When people do activities because they are supposed to perform particular duties, but they don't affect it, can it be called "nothingness"?
For instance, if a person is carrying out mundane daily activities of their lives like driving to pick up their child from school, can it be called "nothingness"?
This is what I believe- This planet is like a stage upon which we are performing a drama. The kind of life you lead is entirely your creation. Whatever colour you wish to paint it, it is all your creation. You have already created it, and it will continue to exist. Moreover, several aspects of this life drama will keep you preoccupied with various responsibilities. However, to achieve contentment, you must reach a point when you can let go some of your responsibilities.
But we must understand that the happiness you derive by letting go of your responsibilities is not everlasting. Although, this desire to abstain from participating in the stressful daily chores may appear rather soothing. However, once you are no longer engage in these responsibilities, there is a chance you will feel extremely distraught. This is because you desire to experience life's complexities and achieving your objectives.
Is it possible to experience nothingness while we are in the drama of life?
As we go through the process of experiencing nothingness, we feel a moment of enlightenment. It is in this state of nothingness that we see ourselves emerging. I do not want to make this subject esoteric, beyond human comprehension, because this is our journey of nothingness to ask ourselves: who am I? In discovering myself, I entered a nothingness when I realized that we are nothing but light and sound, vibrating and pulsating.
So basically, what I experienced is life energy. This energy is not in the physical aspect but in the non-physical element of nothingness. It doesn't seem inexplicable to you. Does it seem completely alien? No, it cannot. Because that's who we are.

Still, as soon as we are over the process, we may again get engaged in our respective lives, performing responsibilities, arranging for household and professional affairs, planning for the future, among other things. Life is like a painting. We paint a line, draw together or draw against each other, splash colours on each other, or take away somebody's colours. This is the whole drama of life. Undeniably, we completely forget the spiritual experience of being in a state of "nothingness". And from there, we move to our previous selves: we again become creators.

But again, the question is, how to experience this "nothingness"?

It felt as though I needed to experience "nothingness" when my son asked me why I was going forward when we were walking on the beach.

We all are constantly building the script of our life plans, always planning the next step we must take. Every day, we invest in the story we've made for ourselves. For an entire day, to experience this state, just detach yourself from your story for a day. Don't script the plot of your story for one day. This is the moment to go backwards, towards the origin.

How straightforward and uncomplicated it is! Sitting in "nothingness," not planning, fretting or pondering the next steps you want to take in your life. Detach yourself from your daily life! It may appear to be tedious and uninteresting.

But you must come to the realization that when you act on a stage, how well you know that you are performing. But when you are acting in your life, you forget it. In this "nothingness", you can distinguish between the two parallels of your life.

These phases are reciprocal yet corresponding experiences of "nothingness" and the "acts on the stage of life". One instant, you are nothing and at the other instant, then feel the need to act to become something.

This feeling to respond to something is because people are afraid of being nothing. But, this "nothingness" is a sense of completion in itself. You are complete when you're nothing with no desires. You are full of energy and vibrate to the full potential of being anything and everything.

Experiencing this made me perceive things in life differently. It wasn't like my eyes were beaming, but I could feel the difference. I was still partaking in the daily acts of the drama of the life I've built, but I felt enriched.

Being through various stages of life, I am arriving at the point where being nothing looked scary. Knowledge from the outside sources we acquire from reading books or from the experiences of others gives us a false sense of being something and a false sense of detachment. Hence, it took me time to reach an internal state of "nothingness" and I didn't arrive at it immediately.

In this process of awakening, I observed one thing repeatedly.

Could I feel this detachment if I lose something or a person suddenly? What would be my reaction? Will the knowledge I've acquired come to any rescue? I realized that it wasn't the case as knowledge is a collection of data that we all acquire in the state of being in existence, being something.

This "nothingness" allows us to feel from our point of view and not someone else's. This is when I see myself progressing.

The path to reach "nothingness" starts from observing the "somethings of life". The aspects of life that keep you involved, engrossed, and entangled are those we need to focus on. It is a journey backwards when we see the extent to which we are entangled. It is hard to move back when everyone is moving forward.

I am not the first to have gone through these experiences as many people have expressed these kinds of reality where "nothingness" overpowers them. But when I see it coming to me, I say: it is worth it. It is a goal worth accomplishing.

I call this journey "demystifying" because there is a mystery. I am demystifying, and there is fear in demystifying. Most of us want to leave some mystery, but once you demystify, you have to come to a point where you need to choose whether to want to create. When you are not creating, you are vibrating and pulsating and in the rhythm of existence.

Hoping for a new normal of "nothingness."

Looking at the world after the Covid 19 pandemic, I wonder at the word: "normal". After the pandemic, the new normal is the Covid vaccination. A new normal signifies people wearing masks and being fully vaccinated. We've set up new normal, but who thought this would ever happen?

Likewise, I envision that being in "nothingness" will be the new normal for people worldwide. The strive to set a foundation for the state of "nothingness" to be the new normal depends on how many people start to realize, recognize and comprehend this for others to follow. This realization among people to reach this new normal to incorporate being in a state of "nothingness" during their daily acts of life is what I endeavour for individuals around the world!

Not only because it helps us to move back to contemplate of the question of your "being" but because it is during this nothingness that you are full of energy and vibrate at your highest level, capable of being anything and everything.

CHAPTER 8

'AAO'- Arrive at Origin

Meditation and mindfulness techniques have become increasingly popular in recent years around the world. However, there's a common misconception among some that embracing spirituality means looking at life with seriousness to escape reality. As spiritual journeys have an esoteric element, we may feel that when a person becomes spiritual, he/she looks and feels differently. In reality, it's the exact opposite. Spirituality, instead, means achieving a natural and absolutely normal state of being.

To make spirituality more approachable for people from all walks of life, I use the term 'AAO', which stands for 'Arrive at Origin'. "AAO" or "आओ" is pronounced as /aʊ/ in Hindi, which means 'To Arrive'. It is a process that involves observing silence and is an alternative to mindfulness techniques and meditation practices. By observing silence, we embark on a journey to come back to ourselves and 'arrive at our origin' which is our real selves, and experience the true essence of spirituality. It is a process that allows people to resolve the complexities of their life and achieve a peaceful state of mind by being with oneself by sitting in silence for a duration of time during the day. Observing silence is the best way for one to become a "normal" and "simple" person, which is the true essence of spirituality.

'AAO' enables us to trust our fundamental instinct and knowledge with which we have been blessed and may master through observation and faith.

The process involves one sitting in silence in which one experiences 'thoughtlessness' and 'nothingness.' Accepting this 'thoughtlessness' and 'nothingness,' we can be free from stress.

I call this a journey. Just like we make a plan for our journey when traveling somewhere, we need to plan the journey to arrive at ourselves. For this journey of observing silence, you must make a chart of when and how long you are going to observe silence. For example, mark from 'Day 1' to 'Day 10' to see how far you have traveled in this journey.

With physical goals achieved, I have transitioned to a state where I believe I am back to the beginning. When you reach the starting point, you realize that joy lies not in achieving physical goals but in truly knowing yourself.

Achieving 'Sensing'

Most people believe that we all have five senses, and very few people possess a sixth sense. But we all possess a sixth sense; we just don't work on strengthening it. The act of observing silence allows us to deepen the intensity and vigor of this faculty. Silence allows us to receive what I call 'Sensing,' which is a different kind of response to livingness.

"Sensing is beyond the five senses. The faculty of sense has to be developed so that we reduce our dependence on our five sense organs so that, in addition to the five sense organs, we can remain active and alert at all times. The act of sensing does not require us to make efforts to be active all the time. You must achieve 'Sensing' by traveling through silence to arrive at your origin.

Our five senses are the main determinants of our view of reality. When the five sense organs do not see anything, it seems silly and unreal. Moreover, we may believe we are hallucinating or imagining things. We are only interested in seeing in the physical realm as far as our eyes can see, but there is where our blindness begins. The physical reality we live in is composed of solid components. As long as something is not visible, we do not believe it. People are drawn to objects they can see, believing them to be real and desiring to hold them to sense their substance. Similarly, if we can smell whatever we see, only then does it feel real to us.

The 'AAO: Arrive at Origin' involves travel through the following:

1. Travel through different thoughts– The randomness of thoughts is the highest one has ever experienced at the beginning of the process. Having these thoughts is natural since they haven't been given enough attention. This causes people to process the information they haven't yet processed. Observing your thought process becomes easier. The thoughts jump from subject to subject, from place to place, from person to person, and from bad to good moments. Nonetheless, we must remember that our mind attempts to handle every thought logically and systematically by grading them according to their priority. We must believe it is very systematic as it works by itself, so we must not interfere with our thoughts. As they get processed, thoughts start to reduce, and eventually, one reaches the state of 'thoughtlessness.'

Also, in the process, one receives only those thoughts one can face. People are not reminded of sad or negative things if they aren't ready to be reminded. So, negative thoughts are not triggered. If one is prepared for these thoughts, only then do they occur, and one must not interfere with them.

2. You should be able to travel through the noise around you - When observing silence, we should not be distracted by the sounds around us. The process does not require silence; it can be conducted in a natural or normal environment.

3. Travel through time– Listening to silence is like traveling through time, starting at one point and moving forward minute by minute.

4. Experience different sensations - When there is silence, the observer usually touches their faces, moves their necks, or changes their positions. The actions are an attempt to escape previously acquired behaviors. The progress represents a greater awareness of the world.

To find ourselves, we must look beyond the physical world. Until we figure that out, everyone's life is missing a piece. Therefore, the journey is about seeing beyond what others cannot see and believing in what others cannot see.

It is often the case that people seek to explain existence and what lies beyond it to others, but they overuse words and language, causing their explanation to be too complex for others to understand. For this reason, every individual must define their meaning and purpose in life, which requires a fresh look at themselves. There is no doubt that we've come from beyond and will go beyond this physical existence. Although you may be unsure whether you have come from beyond, there is no doubt that you will go beyond it because we are all aware that one day our bodies will no longer exist.

What makes philosophers and researchers unique is their desire to look beyond. The special characteristic of philosophers and scholars is their drive to delve beyond the obvious. Newton, for example, realized that the earth pulls an apple down when he looked at the apple due to gravity. What made his discovery crucial was his ability to look past the physical world because before then, apples also fell, but nobody contemplated why they did so. The discovery of new things was made possible only when people looked beyond physical reality. The existence of things is well known, but only a few enlightened minds are able to research them after acknowledging their existence.

How to acknowledge that we come from beyond the physical realities?

We are all skeptical that our existence lies beyond our physical reality. But there is an inherent desire to understand who we are and where we originated. And for that, we need to go beyond our five senses - to reason and discover why things occur in a certain way and to find the purpose of our life.

To acknowledge that we come from beyond the physical reality, we must first recognize that our body and self are separate. The body you are in is not who you are. The body is made up of skin, flesh, bones, and muscles.

We can compare the connection between our body and self/spirit to a car and its driver.

If this driver is good at driving, the car will go through the traffic and turn up the hill without encountering any problems, whereas bad driving will result in accidents. The ability to learn how to drive a car well is for the driver, not for the car. Likewise, the entire knowledge of the physical world is for the body, not the self/spirit. As with a car, you are the one driving this 'body.' When you leave it, its body will stay wherever you leave it: it cannot move.

But we spend our lifetime learning techniques for our bodies and not for ourselves. For instance, we pay so much attention to meditation and breathing exercises, not realizing that they are for the body and not for you because our spiritual existence is not based on breath.

Thoughts are Nothing but Energies that are not Understood and Which Need to be Understood. And Why Observe Silence?

There are various types of chanting people use to cope with these thoughts, but they do not go away. This is because when you are focussing on your breathing, your body parts, or chanting, you won't be able to hear your thoughts. This led me to realize two things: first, these thoughts are nothing but energies that are not understood and need to be understood. Imagine, for instance, somebody mistreated you earlier and made you feel bad. Usually, we try to run away from it because we don't want to remember that bad experience. You attempt to figure out why the incident happened and why the person behaved as they did. This unanalyzed part, which seems to make no sense to you, goes around in circles

How Does 'AAO', the Process of Observing Silence, Assist Us in Achieving a Blissful State of Mind?

Nature has made everything in this world as a whole. Our body processes are likewise a whole which we should follow rather than making it follow us. When our stomach is upset, we avoid eating for some time until it resets and is ready to digest food again. Likewise, we need to provide respite to our minds for some time by observing silence so that it resets. Observing silence refreshes you as it frees your memory units, which can absorb more information. However, it is essential to note that the time to reset your mind through observing silence can differ for different people.

When you observe silence, you will realize that so many things in your mind need to be processed. For instance, you might start contemplating why a certain person said something to you or behaved in a particular manner. The simplicity of the process is that it allows people who encounter several rushing thoughts to process all the thoughts they have and let those thoughts settle down just like sand settles down.

When you sit in silence, you will notice that we have set ourselves at such a fast pace that it takes time for us to slow down. When we observe silence, we start coming back to ourselves, layer by layer. In the process, you will be urged to start accomplishing other tasks. Your body starts rushing. But you need to understand that you need to cross through these speed bumps to achieve the calmness you strive for.

What is Observing Silence?

Observing Silence is the process of sitting down, simply closing your eyes, and letting thoughts come from all directions. All those thoughts are imbued with energy from the surroundings. Just like radio waves, thoughts exist as energy in the air. Similar to how radio waves can be captured by radio and listened to, thoughts are also captured in the universe around us. We must sit and let the thoughts occur until they vanish on their own. These thoughts need not be dealt with: simply let them come and go. Likewise, you may experience emotions. Allow them to come and go. Simply observe the thoughts and emotions you come across without acting on them. After a few days of doing this, you will notice that your thoughts will settle down.

When you observe Silence, you do not have to analyze it; it analyses the thoughts on its own and provides the answer. It works independently; you don't have to do anything to it.

Avoid Artificial Solutions

Essentially, we are a fully functional machine capable of solving problems independently, and we don't have to do anything to it. Instead, we attempt to find answers to your issues by consulting external sources, which is the wrong approach. You complicate the matter if you come to me for help when facing a problem. Because the solution to your problems lies within you. However, you look outside of yourself for a solution. So now, in the same database, you have a problem and an artificial solution that doesn't fit well with the problem. This artificial solution may be found in a book, a motivational speaker, or your parents or relatives. In our search for a solution to our problems, the more people we consult, the more advice or artificial solutions we receive. To make matters worse, in our quest for a solution, we take contradictory advice from people who believe they have received wisdom from their life experiences and know what's best for us. In reality, the person facing the problem knows best because they live according to their capabilities and environment. However, we do not give ourselves sufficient time to let that intelligence emerge. As soon as we feel anxious, we start looking for answers outside us because we feel nervous.

Energy in the form of thoughts clears itself on its own.

Yet what you should do is that you should be with yourself. Close your eyes, calm down, and whatever troubled thoughts bother you will settle. Give it some time to settle. Fortunately, our system resets itself automatically, but you must give it some time. It will unwind whatever you wind because that is nature's law. We, as spiritual beings, can heal ourselves without the aid of any external means or measures. We need time to shake hands with ourselves to heal ourselves. The people who find this process difficult must understand that an individual who cannot sit with their eyes closed for five minutes isn't happy with themselves. A person who likes himself or herself will sit with himself or herself. When one cannot sit with oneself, one is running away from oneself. There is no need for action on your part. Energy in the form of thoughts will clear itself on its own. Flowers grow when a plant undergoes all the necessary processes. Although we can shorten the growth cycle by injecting growth stimulators, the plant doesn't even last for that long and doesn't smell that well. We must understand that our thoughts require time because we are part of nature.

What should we be working towards?

We are constantly reminded that we are left behind if we don't act quickly. Whether as parents wanting their children to do better every day or as individuals in a relationship hoping things will move forward, since birth, we have been conditioned to think that life aims to move forward. But exactly what should we be aiming for?

Consider how many borrowed ideas we live with without realizing that these borrowed ideas are not our ideas. However, you must recognize that you can only settle on your ideas. The wisdom gained by spiritual gurus is obtained in part through reading and learning, and self-introspection. However, the best ideas come from spending enough time with oneself. Likewise, we must look within ourselves to discover the answers we're seeking. Thoughts are nothing more than energies that cannot be understood and are waiting to be understood.

Try sitting with yourself and seeing what happens. A spiritual being resides in a physical form, which is the body. Without the spiritual being, this physical form has no value. It is of no value if that energy is not present. When it dies, we bury it or burn it. You are what keeps it alive. You are part of nature, so you are born with inherent natural wisdom.

Observing Silence is a form of spiritual yoga that does not involve physical activity but spiritual activity. Close your eyes and observe Silence. You should start by observing Silence for 15 minutes every day. Ideally, you should do this before going to sleep because nobody can take away that time from you. In the same way, we cannot see beneath the turbulence of the lake until it settles. Initially, there will be so many things distracting you that you will not be able to see what lies beneath. When the turbulence settles, you see deep and hidden thoughts coming to the surface. These innermost thoughts were always there, but you were unaware of them. It is believed that muddy water in a lake should not be disturbed for some time. Similarly, our thoughts must settle before we can see what lies beneath them. Although the process is so simple, people find it unusual because they are used to the complexity and hence, find activities involving action or chant more rewarding than sitting and doing nothing while observing Silence. However, as opposed to meditation and mindfulness, where we are required to concentrate on something or observe our breathing, the simple process of observing Silence does not require us to focus. If you begin to observe Silence, you will feel uncomfortable for a while, but this is when you must remain strong. If you stay resilient when you need to get up enough, you will succeed in your quest for peace.

If you observe Silence, you can learn so much about your spiritual nature. You will uncover more about spiritual energy the more you sit in Silence. Your body will no longer define who you are because you will understand your separateness from it. We all are spirits, but we fear talking about spirits because we believe everything unseen is unreal and ghostly. But when you close your eyes and pray to something invisible, what are you praying to? It means you're talking to the invisible world. You pray to God but cannot see him. His presence only fills your soul. Likewise, anyone in their body trying to feel the world around them or the universe around them can realize the existence of their soul/spirit/energy.

We also believe that while practicing anything new, we need to discipline ourselves. In my view, discipline in itself is a little harsh word we have been taught over the years that people need to discipline themselves and have to follow discipline. However, I believe this journey should be effortless because if it becomes an effort, it becomes a chore. Thus, observing Silence is something you don't have to do at any particular time. You can do it anytime.

For instance, while going in your car, instead of turning up the music or talking to someone on the phone, you can drive in Silence. Or you can do it while you are eating or taking a shower.

Furthermore, as a result of observing silence, you will come to understand that what you have been lacking has been the ability to love yourself.

How to acknowledge that we come from beyond the physical realities?

We are all skeptical that our existence lies beyond our physical reality. But there is an inherent desire to understand who we are and where we originated. And for that, we need to go beyond our five senses - to reason and discover why things occur in a certain way and to find the purpose of our life.

To acknowledge that we come from beyond the physical reality, we must first recognize that our body and self are separate. The body you are in is not who you are. The body is made up of skin, flesh, bones, and muscles.

We can compare the connection between our body and self/spirit to a car and its driver.

If this driver is good at driving, the car will go through the traffic and turn up the hill without encountering any problems, whereas bad driving will result in accidents. The ability to learn how to drive a car well is for the driver not for the car. Likewise, the entire knowledge of the physical world is for the body, not the self/spirit. As with a car, you are the one driving this 'body'. When you leave it, its body will stay wherever you leave it: it cannot move.

But we spend our lifetime learning techniques for our body and not for our self. For instance, we pay so much attention to meditation and breathing exercises not realising that they are for the body and not for you because our existence is not based on breath.

Thoughts are Nothing but Energies that are not Understood and Which Need to be Understood. And Why Observe Silence?

People use various techniques to cope with these thoughts through various types of chanting, but they don't go away. This is because when you are conscious of your breathing, your body parts, or chanting, you won't be able to hear your thoughts. This led me to realize two things: first, these thoughts are nothing but energies that are not understood and need to be understood. Imagine, for instance, somebody mistreated you earlier and made you feel bad. Usually, we try to run away from it because we don't want to remember that bad experience. You attempt to figure out why the incident happened and why the person behaved as they did. This unanalysed part, which seems to make no sense to you, goes around in circles.

What should we be working towards?

We are constantly reminded that we are left behind if we don't act quickly. Whether as parents wanting their children to do better every day or as individuals in a relationship hoping things will move forward, since birth, we have been conditioned to think that the aim of life is to move forward. But exactly what should we be aiming for?

Consider how many borrowed ideas we live with without realizing that these borrowed ideas are not our ideas. However, you must recognize that you can only settle on your ideas. The wisdom gained by spiritual gurus is obtained in part through reading and learning and through self-introspection. However, the best ideas come from spending enough time with oneself. Likewise, we must look within ourselves to discover the answers we're seeking. Thoughts are nothing more than energies that cannot be understood and are waiting to be understood.

Try sitting with yourself and seeing what happens. A spiritual being resides in a physical form, which is the body. Without the spiritual being, this physical form has no value. It is of no value if that energy is not present. When it dies, we bury it or burn it. You are what keeps it alive. You are part of nature, so you are born with inherent wisdom.

Observing Silence is a form of spiritual yoga that does not involve physical activity but spiritual activity. Close your eyes and observe Silence. You should start by observing Silence for 15 minutes every day. Ideally, you should do this before going to sleep because nobody can take away that time from you. In the same way, we cannot see beneath the turbulence of the sea until it settles. Initially, there will be so many things distracting you that you will not be able to see what lies beneath. When the turbulence settles, you see deep and hidden thoughts coming to the surface. These innermost thoughts were always there, but you were not aware of them. It is believed that muddy water in a lake should not be disturbed for some time. Similarly, our thoughts must settle before we can see what lies beneath them. Although the process is so simple, people find it unusual because they are used to the complexity and hence, find activities involving action or chant more rewarding than sitting and doing nothing while observing Silence. However, as opposed to meditation and mindfulness, where we are required to concentrate on something or observe our breathing, the simple process of observing Silence does not require us to focus. If you begin to observe Silence, you will feel uncomfortable for a while, but this is when you must remain strong. If you stay resilient when you need to get up enough, you will succeed in your quest for peace.

If you observe Silence, you can learn so much about your spiritual nature. You will uncover more about spiritual energy the more you sit in Silence. Your body will no longer define who you are, because you will understand your separateness from it. We all are spirits, but we fear talking about spirits because we believe everything unseen is unreal and ghostly. But when you close your eyes and you pray to something invisible, what are you praying to? It means you're talking to the invisible world. You pray to God but cannot see him. His presence only fills your soul. Likewise, anyone in their body trying to feel the world around them or the universe around them can realize the existence of their soul/spirit/energy.

We also believe that while practicing anything new, we need to discipline ourselves. In my view, discipline in itself is a little harsh word we have been taught over the years that people need to discipline themselves and have to follow discipline. However, I believe this journey should be effortless because if it becomes an effort, it becomes a chore. Thus, observing Silence is something you don't have to do at any particular time. You can do it anytime, For instance, while going in your car, instead of turning up the music or talking to someone on the phone, you can drive in Silence. Or you can do it while you are eating or taking a shower

Two Processes Happen When We Observe Silence: Inertia of Motion and Inertia of Rest.

These two processes happen when we sit and observe silence. The ones who try it give themselves time where there is no interchange of words. Initially, you will notice many thoughts coming to your mind because of the inertia of motion. You must let them be in that motion till they come to rest by themselves and not interfere with the random thoughts you get. We must realize that every particle in this universe is in motion, and only when it has done its full circle will it go to rest. Something in the inertia of motion continues to be in motion until it is stopped. Something that is the inertia of rest stays in rest until it is pushed to start.

Most people who observe silence initially have numerous thoughts that later subside. So, where do these thoughts go? These thoughts get filed in our brains like we file documents in different folders. After these thoughts settle down, they allow you to come to the present time. In this present time, no thoughts circle.

However, it has to be done daily to ensure that your presence in the present time increases. To help ourselves to be in the present moment, we cannot adopt a more straightforward process than observing silence. Although it is the lightest of the techniques, it seems the most difficult as it makes you feel restless about what you are doing.

What Happens During the Process?

When you 'Observe Silence' initially, it serves a therapeutic purpose, making you feel balanced. But then it starts becoming harder for you. People often express that when they do it for 15 minutes, they feel excellent, but they start becoming uneasy after that. This point is like a speed breaker, which you have to jump. So, when it becomes more challenging for you to keep making an effort, you must not get up because you are experiencing energy which makes you uncomfortable.

In the process, you might experience aches, pains or stiffness. You might also feel sleepy, and if you do so, you should not get up in between that sleep. Many people fall asleep and wake up completely fresh. Like I earlier said, it is a journey, and it is not like you're sitting in silence; you're moving. The movement is felt when you hit these barriers.

The process is so doable and straightforward that it allows you to build up from wherever you left before. For instance, if previously you did it for fifteen days and didn't continue doing it for two years, you will find yourself at the same stage where you left yourself two years before.

Avoid Endorsing the 'Holier than Thou' Attitude While Exploring Spirituality?
When people are on a spiritual journey, they often believe in the concept of 'holier than thou. I also went through the same path, so I wish to share my experience. Although most people believe in 'holier than thou in their spiritual path, this is something we should be cautious of. We must avoid wishing to attain this 'holier than thou' state of being because it makes us act differently, believing that we understand more than others and think that other people are stupid and naive.

But when we start believing and acting in this manner, we act very seriously, making other people believe that if anyone is going on a spiritual path, a higher level of seriousness has to be achieved that disallows us to take part in any leisure or recreational activities. They start feeling that they have to leave behind enthusiasm and liveliness and need to stop cracking jokes or stop being playful, thinking that going on the spiritual path means attaining wisdom and leaving behind their worldly desires and not desiring money. Leaving behind all these things makes people avoid following a spiritual path. Also, most young people avoid exploring their spirituality because they believe it is for people who've reached maturity or have attained a certain age. This is why I wish to emphasize that the process can even be practiced by working professionals, too, as whoever has tried it sincerely has felt the difference as the process enabled them to reach a blissful state of mind away from the anxieties and stress of the modern world.

Also, people must realize that they can venture on this path of spirituality and still do everything they wish to do with a spirit of play. And the spirit of play comes when your mind is settled down, and you're not looking for things compared to something else. When you start looking for things compared to the past, or future, we just go off our feet. But if we are present, everything seems playful because you are in the moment and enjoy what you're doing.

Our thoughts are constantly in motion; sometimes, the motion is swift, and sometimes it is slow, but eventually, the thoughts settle down. We need to remember that we must give sufficient time to thoughts so that they settle down eventually. I reiterate that it takes different people a different amount of time to reset their minds through this process. Hence, to see how much progress you've made, you should compare yourself. People often compare themselves with others' standards, which can be frustrating because you're less than something, whatever height you achieve. Otherwise, there's always a vacuum when trying to be somebody or achieve more than you can. But, if you start comparing yourself and analysing your everyday progress, it is very satisfying, enabling you to be at peace with yourself. We must remember this as we live in a very motivating world where we compare ourselves with others in every sphere of life, looking at each other and wanting to go beyond our capacity. But you are always known by your capacity, how much you have achieved and how much you've progressed in comparison to yourself every passing day. And most of the time, you will see that you have progressed, which is very fulfilling. Not only must we adopt this approach in this process. We must strive to adopt this approach in every sphere of life. For instance, while dealing with your children, you must understand that they are beating their set standards.

How is observing silence different from other meditation and chanting techniques?

All chanting techniques and different meditations involve focusing on something or some point or involve the repetition of a particular chant. When you are doing something, like focusing on your breath or chanting, you allow yourself to get involved again. When you do not do anything, you are in nothingness. Hence, when we observe silence, we must sit in a vacuum, avoiding every activity and thought. Therefore, it is the hardest of all techniques.

However, people who follow guided meditations most sincerely have also expressed that even when they involve themselves in any guided meditation or chanting exercise, they automatically shift to observing silence.

Untrain and Unlearn What You Have Learned to Resolve Your Problems

We always try to adopt new ways of training our minds. When we train our mind in a certain way, it automatically starts working in a particular manner. And even if you want it to stop it from working in a specific manner, you cannot stop it because you get accustomed to how you have trained your mind to do it repeatedly.

It is important to note that observing silence is also the process of untraining and unlearning. I discussed with an enlightened person who could not completely solve his problems despite exploring various practices for a solution to his problems. He had learned so much that the most challenging task for me was to make him unlearn what he had learned. I simply told him to relax and let the problem go. Amused at my suggestion, he asked me how he could let go of an issue that was troubling him so much.

This is what I told him and would like to share with all of you: Our mind works like a computer: it receives data, puts it in one part of our mind, computes it, and then programs it. However, when it cannot resolve and program a particular thought and then another problem surfaces, you force it to run and analyze many programs altogether. This takes away all your energy instead of giving you energy. However, when you sit in silence, all those programs will start running automatically. We must let all the thoughts of our mind process entirely until our mind is occupied with contemplating them. When you observe silence, all your problems will be programmed by your mind and processed.

When to Observe Silence?

I suggest that people observe silence for whatever amount of time, even for an hour or a few hours.

You must remember that observing silence has to be a regular process that has to be done as a part of your daily routine. The best time for observing silence is before you sleep at night. Before lying down to sleep, sit and observe silence for 10-15 minutes. This will allow you to have a very peaceful sleep because you let all the data and thoughts in your mind settle down. Just like when we turn off the computer, it takes time to close all the windows; your mind also needs some time to process the thoughts one by one. A good sleep after observing silence helps you reboot yourself in the morning.

Also, I have found that observing silence in the evening is more fruitful than doing so in the morning, as we have so many things to tend to in the morning. But in the evening, you can scan the entire day by observing silence. By sitting silent before sleeping, all your thoughts get sorted by themselves, making you ready to go to bed.

Practises such as meditation and mindfulness make you feel better because they make you feel like you're coming closer to yourself and coming back home as you learn more things about yourself. However, to add attraction to the meditation process, there are various guided meditations with music in the background or wearing a specific type of clothes. What people don't realize is that adopting these practices is taking you away from yourself.

Why Observe Silence and Not Mindfulness?

Mindfulness is focusing on the things around you to stop the chatter in your mind. However, we don't realize that focus is totally against the nature of the mind. We can't focus our minds as they are like flying horses. We need to figure out how to ride over it and enjoy it.

One of the worst things anyone can tell you to do is control your thoughts because it makes you think more of things you wish to avoid. For instance, when someone tells you not to think about ice cream, what you think about all the time is ice cream. I never give people homework during sessions because giving them something to do is another problem you encounter while trying to find a solution. Also, a lack of time to work on something can make you feel that you won't be able to improve or come up with a solution. This is not how life has to be: life is a beautiful gift, and you must understand how it works. We have to just go with the flow. We must stop subjecting our minds to motivational books, Youtube videos, and other social media channels; instead, we need to be with ourselves for some time.

Nothingness as a way of life

The word 'effortless' should replace the words 'discipline,' 'control,' and 'focus' when discussing spiritual practices because by doing so, it is likely that people will be attracted towards embracing spiritual practices. Looking at my cat, I feel we are the same since we both just pass the time. As I write this, she sits at the window watching the birds. There is nothing for her to do. This is how the natural state of existence is. She makes up a game going from one room to another, and since I'm also moving from one room to the other, we cross each other. In other words, we all aim to achieve something in life that I feel is important, but nothing matters at the end of the day.

How can you overcome our fears through the practice of Observing Silence?

Like we conserve water when there is a water shortage, to begin with, you should conserve your energy. How do we conserve energy? The majority of our energy is spent on useless things. Hence, we should reduce the time we spend watching the news, responding to Whatsapp messages, or talking on the phone. Once you conserve your energy, you have this bulk energy to address your fear. Remember that you cannot address your fears when you have less energy. It takes strength to fight your fears. When fear is a sickness, you must conserve energy and gain strength to prevent it from returning. Let your fears show up while observing silence, Face your fears head-on. It is then that you will be able to stop being fearful. We do not want to look at our fears, but we must remember that fear is always unseen and unknown. When we observe silence, fears show up little by little and disappear.

Straightforward solutions are always the most effective.

Any time we practice something progressively, it brings simplicity and not complexity. The most straightforward solutions are always the best. Let me share with you a joke my mother used to tell.

After wearing his pants, a boy wanted to zip them. Still, he couldn't stand up straight, making everyone think he had a medical emergency. Immediately, the boy was taken to the emergency room. However, when the doctor examined his condition, he found that the boy had tied the button on his sweater with the button on his pants, causing him to be unable to stand up. At that point, I thought that it was a rather silly joke. However, the joke ultimately makes sense to me. It implies that we need to check ourselves before asking for help from others. Your problem may have a simple solution, but the situation has grown in size and shape because you didn't look for that solution. The path to wisdom is not quick or easy, but if you give it time, you will discover it, and once you find it, you are your own master.

Disintegrate 'The Artificial You'

We are all caught in the trap of becoming what we have become throughout our lives. Identifying oneself with a particular person means acting like that person.

To achieve our goals, we live inside what I call the 'Artificial You', someone who has learned to compare themselves to others, comparing themselves with themself, their previous moments or the previous days, or with your previous accomplishments.

We have to disintegrate this “who”, “the Artificial You”, who knows everything and tells you what is good and bad. This “Who- The Artificial You”, which you think is the “Real You”, needs to unlearn the lessons and concepts that determine the meaning of everything around you.

The shell we are in may seem real, but in the midst of observing silence, we catch glimpses of who we are, becoming free of ‘being’ someone or something in life.

With AAO, we can liberate ourselves from the 'Artificial You' that holds us back from being fully present, allowing us to be in the present moment, free of crutches, supports, and lessons we have learned and are used to living with.

We reach a normal state of existence and a normal state of being in our universe by getting free from this 'becomingness'. This ‘being’ is a source of energy that can become whatever it wants to be.

In the process, one questions oneself, ‘Who am I?’ and receives the answer that ‘I am nothing, but I can become anything. It’s like waiting curiously to see behind the curtain at the end of a program, but what we find behind the curtain is ‘nothingness’, which provides one a great relief.

By observing silence, you realize that you can change your identity and relinquish your previous identity, which makes you feel liberated. It is like playing 'roles' which one performs if they want to, and they don't if they don't. By observing silence, you start thinking about what you want to become or what role you want to play.

We believe that in the course of our daily lives, we must always be cheerful. However, it is absolutely normal to feel no emotion. In addition to achieving nothingness during sessions, we must also attain it throughout the day.

A true test of success in this practice is our ability to maintain this feeling of nothingness in our everyday lives. A permanent state of nothingness in your daily life can be achieved by observing Silence unhindered by the desire to feel any emotion.

Not only does observing silence balance our energy within us, but it also rebalances the energy in our houses. It is amazing to realize how when we change ourselves, we also change our environment and surroundings, which not only helps us feel calmer but also allows those around us to feel calm. When we reach that state, a chain reaction begins in which we gain the ability to influence our surroundings peacefully and effortlessly.

When one starts to perceive the effects of observing silence, which many people do within six to seven days of commencing the practice, one realizes that a sense of homecoming is neither unique nor unknown. We don't feel that something new or strange has happened. We just feel grateful to have reached home, where we can be whoever we want.

ARRIVE AT ORIGIN. WELCOME BACK!!!!