You are the healer; you will heal yourself.

The Process of Healing

You are the healer; you will heal yourself.

There's a world of love around me, where love is the only language that's better understood than any other. I am full of gratitude for the whole world I've built and nurtured.

Dedicated to my mother-in-law Zubaidah Madan, who embodies resilience and healed herself on her own. The inner strength she displays is the inspiration for this book.

The team at Soul Body Healing Center is amazing and patient with my cretivity. I cannot thank enough Ms.Sonu Jain for her long hours and thoughfulness in building up the network.

I sincerely thank Mr. Paramveer Singh for adding the desired beauty to all of my extempore videos.

I would like to thank all my clients who have been kind enough to understand my simplicity which is the hardest part in today's world.

Last but not least my special thanks to Dexter Gelfand who completely gets me and guides me.

THE PROCESS OF HEALING

Healing refers to the health of the living. Living involves healing. Illnesses, injuries, and ill health are healed every day. You heal from losses; you heal from insults; you heal from life because life does not come with clear definitions every day. Every day is a new day. And, every day we face a new situation and a new problem. We make a constant effort to keep solving problems, but the problems never seem to end.

The only way to deal with problems is to get up and face them. We must be prepared for all situations as they come, and by the end of the day, we'll know what has happened and what it means.

Having to go through healing is part of the process and healing takes time but we must remember that the healing process goes along with life.

The process of healing should be an integral part of living. The healing process should be done every day.

What needs healing? People around the world compartmentalize healing into three parts: their bodies, minds, and spirits.

I don't categorize; if something is missing from you, it's you. You can feel it through your body. You have a very perceptive and impressive body; your body reflects you because you are affected by things that happen to you.

Change happens after each experience and impingement. There are times when you appreciate a change, and there are times when you don't as it is sometimes uncomfortable to go through a change.

A thorough understanding and processing of these changes is necessary. Bringing you to understanding, bringing you to be an integral part of you.

There is no such thing as compartmentalizing your body, mind, and spirit. Healing focuses on you. There is only one you; it is only your story. You are the one driving this vehicle. The car tends to break down if the driver is not fully attentive, forgets the rules of driving, and is not present.

Healing comes in its entirety. This is the origin of the word holistic. Holistic means Whole. The mountains and nature stand as a whole; it presents themselves as a whole. You have to be part of nature whole, not broken into many, many pieces. That is what holistic healing is. That is what I specialize in. I help you understand what went wrong, where, how, and when because of what you are and your situation, and you know it the best.

I help you navigate the path of healing. You are the healer; you will heal yourself. I will just hold your hand. This is what holistic healing is. Welcome to this path, and take your first step. Thank you

- Is it necessary to compartmentalize healing into mind, body and spirit? If not, then how can you find what is missing?
- How does a thorough understanding and processing of these changes help you?

Holistic Healing!

Throughout centuries, people have been using various therapies for Holistic healing. A few of them are acupuncture, acupressure, Eastern medicine, Indian medicine, Ayurveda, Chinese herbal medicines, Reiki energy healing, crystal healing, balancing the chakras, EFT AND so on. And people use therapy/technique, and then they use another therapy/technique, and sometimes they get confused in all these services and do not know the headway out of it. Healing someone or healing yourself needs patience and patience, following the process, and going through it one step at a time.

I have always tried to look at things differently and understand what everybody tries to do. When anyone offers healing in all these different forms, they're addressing you.

They're talking to you, nurturing and supplementing food in your body, and making you understand how food and you interact; that's why herbs and medicines have become part of healing.

There is a conventional way of healing which is pretty symptomatic, and the symptomatic form is when you match the pill with the ill and see the symptoms and then take any medication which can subdue those symptoms and not handle the symptoms are cure you from those symptoms, but somehow manage those symptoms and then keep on managing lifelong that is a term they use sometimes I ask how long the life remains, once you start managing symptoms.

Other systems, which sometimes you know do not have any explanation, like Reiki energy healing, acupuncture, and acupressure, have their school of thought, and they deal with you and the body. When I address somebody's healing process, I first try to understand from where that person is coming and how he is living his day-to-day life. What does he do in his free time? And what does he stand for? What are his value systems? And what thoughts is he carrying? Who does he follow, with what lens is he looking the life, and if there are many perspectives one person is looking at on life? So, all those perspectives may not be aligned together, and as a result, there is confusion.

Confusion is the first step of disease. When you start getting confused, then this is starting this disease. My first task is to take somebody out of confusion in his or her life. I just check these things with them :how people are addressing their life; how many ways they go at one particular moment; how many people are influencing their life; and how many chapters they have opened up in their life that they are reading simultaneously. Confusion is the first step when healing goes out of the window. We have to sort out the confusion as the first step of healing. And then you can use any system of therapy which I mentioned earlier. But in case your life is not sorted out and confusion is not taken care of, none of the therapy remains as effective as it is claimed. Look at all the various aspects of your life from where the confusion is emerging, close some windows of your life plus some chapters, which are not necessary to read, end some relationships plus some engagements so that there are not too many random particles in your life running in all directions at one particular moment.

✦ POINTS TO PONDER

- What is the first step of disease?
- When does healing go out of the window?
- Why does no therapy stay effective?
- What should one do when he/she sees confusion emerging?

Take one step at a time to heal!

Nobody can heal you, but you yourself. For you to heal yourself, you have to come up with all your energy together. And for that energy to be together, you have to see various day-to-day activities which disperse you or distribute you in different segments. When I ask somebody to take his first step in the process of healing, I always say that you must make a list of all the undone, unfinished work in your life which are pending. Those pending items are taking away a lot of your energy or attention, and just by making a list of those things, you will restore your energy and you will know what to do.

To get out of confusion, the first step is to hold on to one and off solution and then navigate along with that solution through the problem. So, putting your energy together is the first step, and then for you to heal or recover from something, some ailment, some loss, or some problem, always try to make a timeline like when it started and how it was before it started. And analyse the problem from then to now. Because the timeline will bring you to now, , then you will be surprised to see that you are still in them or not. So, if one does not move along with time, so-called time or flow with the flow of nature, the flow of the universe, and gets stuck in some part that person is under the illusion and thinks this is how it will be forever.

Making a timeline can be the next step time from when the problem started to the present time; List out all the events which come to your mind.

List out all the situations you have been through from then to now.

List out all the fears you foresee and anxieties you foresee that also take you away from now,

A human being or an individual is in now, he cannot be in the past or the future. If you are in the past or the future, then your energy is unavailable. You are dispersed in these two time zones and these zones take you away from now, right when you want to heal in the present. In the 'now'.

I help you, I help you by holding your hand, help you walk from then to now. Look at the beauty of now. The Power Strength of now. Now it might look scary. Not because of its existence but because it can look scary because you're still out of it. You're still out of it either on this side or on that side, either in the past or in the future. Let's come back to the present moment. Get our energy together and heal ourselves. This is what holistic healing is about. We will travel together.

✦ POINTS TO PONDER

- Who can heal you? What do you have to do to heal yourself?
- What disperses your energy?
- What should be the first step of healing?
- What should be done after putting your energy together?
- When does your energy become unavailable?

How can healing be slowed down?

When we are continuing our journey of healing, there are certain things that we get used to. And we do not think they come as a barrier to the healing process. One of the critical factors is your environment. Sometimes you're living in an environment that is heavy on you in the sense that it does not gel with you. That environment is not conducive for you, but you have learned to adjust with it and you decide to live in that environment, come what may.

Gradually that suppressive environment or makes nothing of you, catches up with you. And that a suppressive environment is unavoidable. You learn to live in that. And you learn to manage and handle that, which is a part and parcel of your day-to-day living. By the time you find that out, it has done damage to you because you are expressing their suppression in some form, say, emotional outbursts or physical outbursts. So, it is important to recognize the dangerousness of the environment.

Some of the hints of biggest supplier of danger to you which I can you is media, TV, YouTube, and WhatsApp and all other accessories which we are using for our day-to-day living and give us extra information about the things which we don't need to. But through these, all these unwanted information come in front of us. Watching these, we start feeling that COVID increases at a faster rate, more diseases are expanding, fire in this part of the country, earthquakes over there, and war in another region. These are certain things that you cannot do anything about because you have limited capability and capacity.

But you become an effect of it; you feel the emotion of people in an earthquake. And people in war and people in the fire, people dying of COVID, you feel their emotions. You cannot just say, switch off; you get involved. And then the whole environment around you seems very dangerous. And you just unknowingly remain suppressed by those kinds of news.

If you're living in a family, or in a relationship, where you are being corrected over and over and you are being told old stories, what you are being told are the different responsibilities you must handle too so that you are on an alert in that familiar relationship or the presence of your family. Always ready to provide, you cannot relax. You know, that alertness also suppresses you because you want to relax. And be yourself, be with yourself, and be who you are. And you do not need to be corrected and reminded all the time that this is how you live and this is how you should live.

So, that is additional suppression that comes which is very hidden which you think is part and parcel of life. And I don't think that it should be. You cannot come out of familiar relationships. You know those who are doing all this to you from the family you're living with or your near and dear ones. But recognizing that this is affecting you. The first step of healing is to handle the dangerous environment.

The first step is to become aware that this kind of information is bringing danger to you. So, be aware and save yourself as much as you can. And from this extra information or this extra correction or this extra alertness. And as if something is going to happen, right the next moment.

The healing touch!

Healing touch is a type of therapy that involves using the hands to promote physical, mental, and emotional healing. It is based on the idea that the body has an energy field, and that by using touch and other techniques, a practitioner can balance and manipulate this energy field to promote healing.

Healing touch can be used to treat a variety of conditions, including pain, anxiety, depression, and stress. It is often used in conjunction with other therapies, such as massage, acupuncture, and traditional medical treatments.

There is some scientific evidence to support the effectiveness of healing touch, particularly in reducing pain and anxiety. However, more research is needed to fully understand its potential benefits and how it works.

Another aspect of healing is giving yourself healing a touch. In the healing touches, one of the very, very important touches is emotion- surround yourself with people, those who care for you, those who love you, and their emotion matters to you. And by being with them, you feel safe. Pay attention, I am not using the word 'happy' here. You feel 'safe'.

The first emotion in healing is that you should feel safe with someone. When you feel safe, you can start unfolding yourself. This we're talking about in case when we are not going for any therapy or any counseling with any professional, then in that case, be with someone whom you feel safe with and start unloading- Unloading the stress and the burden you're carrying with you. And you thought that you are strong and brave enough to abandon them. Let's stop that pretension for some time and then unload. Unload yourself and tell whatever comes to the surface, do not reason and give logic to that state of mind of yours and say, 'Oh, this is not worth telling. This is just such a stupid thought.' And don't think 'Why I'm so sensitive'. Just be tender- be tender with yourself. Take care of yourself, and love yourself.

Let yourself express fully to someone with whom you feel safe, who will just listen.

And the next step is understanding that he doesn't have to sympathize with you, or empathize with you, just be there. Help you make comfortable so that you can express yourself, whatever comes to you. And at that moment just expresses it. And when you start expressing you will see that emotional release helps a lot. It helps to uplift your emotional health, and your well-being, and your appetite starts coming back. You look at the environment, you see the colors, and you feel happy and alive again.

Having the life force to continue the journey of life is the most important thing. And that lifeforce comes from your emotional health. Healing does not mean feeding yourself with extraordinary and different varieties of food, vitamins, and supplements. It does not bring results unless there is emotional food available on which you can chew as much as you want to. And then emotional food which lubricates you and emotional food, which you are deprived of. And emotional being present next to you with full presence and available in soul, body, and mind to help you find somebody like that. In case you cannot find a therapist or you cannot afford a therapist or a counsellor. But find someone who cares to listen and understand. That is a healing touch which is extremely essential in the journey of the process of healing.

Role of nutrition in healing

Healing and nutrition are two critical components that go together. Nutrition could be better understood most of the time. So, many fancy foods, vitamins, supplements, and powders have become an integral part of good nutrition, and counting the calories and how many carbs you are taking less fat sugar substitutes, too many changes have happened in the name of healthy food or nutrition. I have made a thumb rule for myself and many others, which worked very well.

Most of the time, I ask people to go back to the food with which they grew up and eat that food that has contributed to their genetic makeup and that food is a comfort food. So, that food does not have any extra impact on you when you continue with that, because that reminds you of your journey of growth and other foods the body tries to understand so many new grains, we adopt to which we had never eaten when we were growing up. So, different people try different grains, which are from different territories, different nations, and different geographical locations. And they may not be suitable for you because nature has made its plan according to the people and the places the food grown within 100 miles of where you stay the best food for you to consume. Because that is per your composition or your natural biome, so trying many variations of food may be a bad idea.

The only thing one should worry about when you are trying to give nutrition to yourself is to take the food in the same form as it is given by nature do not try to change its form by overcooking, over-preserving, overcooling, overheating that kills it, taking it in its natural form or the whole form is the best way to consume food for its nutritive value that is number one rule having whole foods as they have been given to you by nature and those foods body does understand because it is well adjusted with the genetic makeup to genetic wakeup of plant and your body.

Then to go vegetarian, non-vegetarian, or vegan, it all depends on your attribute or attitude towards that food. If food which is non-vegetarian comprises meat goes well with you, you will be able to digest it better. And if being vegetarian is your choice, that's what your body wants. That will go well with you. And veganism is a choice to make. Or you can alternate in all three types, sometimes going vegetarian, becoming vegetarian, or going vegan. So, if you look at many religions, they observe a few days of leaving meat, say 10-15 days, and a few days of going vegan. So that is an old practice where you can alternate between different food styles. And then the body gets enough of everything. Complicating your lifestyle because of food, and constantly worrying about what you should and should not eat, goes against the natural cycle of ingestion and digestion. After taking food, you just start thinking, oh, this wasn't a good choice, I wish I shouldn't have eaten it, or I over ate, or now onwards, I'm not going to do this or that.

So, all these adjectives in front of the food items, or after the food items were taken, delay the process of nutrition for the body. Whatever, that's why it is said that whatever you take, take a little gratitude because that emotion of gratitude helps get the nutritional value from the food. Whenever you are healing, give yourself good, healthy, wholesome food in the form of love, knowledge, plants, and animals because that makes you part of the universe, and that is what holistic healing is. We shall continue.

Healing Energy

Healing energy is the idea that there is a subtle energy that flows through all living things, and that this energy can be harnessed and directed to promote healing in the body, mind, and spirit. This concept is central to many forms of traditional and complementary medicine, such as acupuncture, Reiki, and healing touch.

The idea of healing energy is often based on the principles of energy medicine, which suggests that energy imbalances in the body can lead to illness and disease. By manipulating and balancing the body's energy, practitioners of healing energy techniques believe that they can help to restore health and wellbeing.

While the existence and effectiveness of healing energy is still debated in the scientific community, there is some evidence to suggest that these techniques can have a positive impact on certain conditions, such as pain, anxiety, and depression. Many people also report feeling more relaxed, centered, and connected after receiving healing energy treatments.

It is important to note that healing energy techniques should not be used as a substitute for medical treatment. If you are experiencing symptoms of an illness or condition, it is important to seek advice from a qualified healthcare provider.

Healing also needs energy coordination, we have seen that energy is something that depletes at a very fast rate. Whether you are not well, you feel lethargic, weak, and have less energy. So, for you to have energy coordinated, you have to sit down with yourself undistracted, uninterrupted, and try to store your energy within yourself.

And for that reason, most of the time people say they meditate. So, meditation can be a little tough in the sense that you have to sit patiently with yourself, which sometimes can be difficult because of the anxiety you have about yourself and you are unable to be quiet and silent, you might want to piece around, and other things. So, meditation is a good process.

And for me, meditation means, sitting down with yourself and just taking a few deep breaths and then just witnessing whatever is going on and then letting the storm settle. And when a storm settles, you see yourself somewhere hiding, afraid to show up, and then show up, show up, and gradually cover the area all around, you look everywhere, and see that you still exist. And that is what meditation does to you, it brings you up from the clouds of fear, despair, anxiety, and an agreement to the fact that you're not well, all those things. So, that is the one and people call that energy healing.

This you can do by yourself, you don't sit with yourself meditating and putting yourself calmly together, or you can ask somebody else to do that energy healing for you; that energy healing is, you know, some kind of Reiki energy healing or you know, there are specific other processes, which people are using body communication, and some massage, and some touch to the body. All these things work.

Some chanting also works because sound brings lots of energy. So, you can chant, you can do OM chanting, or you know some other thing which goes with you, with which you have some pleasant association with whom you feel peace and feel the healing touch.

And also, one more important thing is the essential natural things, which bring energy, the air is one of them. Go out and breathe as much air as you can because air brings all energy to us, the body is composed of air and water, and water brings energy; you drink water as much as you can hot water, lukewarm water, cold water, whatever kind of water you like, drink water, brings energy to you keep yourself warm fire in you protected, keep yourself warm.

Also, one more important aspect which I would like to bring over here is to be in in direct touch with Mother Earth, bare your feet and then stand on Earth, on grass or, in touch with the soil directly because that connection is also extremely important. After all, Mother Earth is magnetic and it has a motherly instinct to completely engulf you and soothe you, and you will see yourself being a part the magnetic earth energy flowing through you when you touch Mother Earth with your bare feet.

These are a few of the energies which you can take from the environment. And then other energies, energy from the plant food, energy from the flowers, and energy from smells of oils. You do not have to believe in any of them but experience them. All these are fine forms of energy and raise your vibrations in a short duration faster than any pill. Homeopathy is an alternative medicine, based on energy and exploring more and more in the energy fields and handling the particular ailment or situation with the equal amount of energy created by enough vibration so that like replaces like, the principle of Homeopathy. As the energy is something that regenerates you and reverberates you and then takes you back to a healthy you. This is what I call energy healing. There are so many things that you can do on your own and there are some places where you can take help from others too.

Bach remedies refer to a system of natural remedies developed by Dr. Edward Bach in the 1930s. The system is based on the idea that certain flowers and plants have healing properties that can help address emotional and psychological imbalances.There are 38 different remedies in the Bach system, each of which is associated with a specific emotional state or condition. Some of the most commonly used remedies include:

Rescue Remedy: A combination of five different Bach remedies used to help alleviate stress and anxiety.

Mimulus: Used for fear of known things, such as fear of spiders or fear of public speaking.

Cherry Plum: Used for fear of losing control or fear of going insane.

Rock Rose: Used for extreme fear or terror.

Clematis: Used for daydreaming and lack of focus.

The remedies are typically taken orally in the form of a dilution, either by placing a few drops directly under the tongue or by mixing the drops with water. Bach remedies are considered safe for most people, although they should not be used as a substitute for professional medical advice or treatment.

Essential oils are concentrated liquids derived from plants. They are obtained through a process of distillation or expression, and contain the natural fragrance and other beneficial properties of the plant. Essential oils have been used for thousands of years in various cultures for their medicinal, cosmetic, and spiritual properties.

There are many different types of essential oils, each with their own unique scent and properties. Some of the most popular essential oils include lavender, peppermint, tea tree, lemon, and eucalyptus. These oils can be used in a variety of ways, such as through aromatherapy, topical application, or ingestion (although ingestion should only be done under the guidance of a healthcare professional).

While essential oils can provide many benefits, it's important to use them safely and properly. They are highly concentrated and can be harmful if ingested in large quantities or applied directly to the skin without proper dilution. It's also important to choose high-quality oils from reputable sources and to avoid using oils that have been adulterated with synthetic additives.

Plants derive energy from the process of photosynthesis, in which they use sunlight, water, and carbon dioxide to produce glucose (a type of sugar) and oxygen. This glucose is then used by the plant for energy, or stored as starch for later use.

When humans consume plant-based foods, they can extract energy from the glucose and other carbohydrates in those foods through a process called cellular respiration. This process occurs in the mitochondria of our cells and involves breaking down the glucose molecules into smaller units and releasing energy in the form of ATP (adenosine triphosphate).

In addition to carbohydrates, plant-based foods also contain other nutrients such as proteins, fats, vitamins, and minerals that our bodies need for various functions. Consuming a balanced diet that includes a variety of plant-based foods can help provide us with the energy and nutrients we need for optimal health.

Fine prints in the healing journey

There are some fine prints along the healing journey, which we sometimes fail to see, and then those final prints tell the entire story. You must be wide awake in order to see those fine prints, and you must pay close attention to what they say. As a result, I have divided those fine prints into three categories.

Among them is what I call your opinion about yourself, or another's opinion about you, that you carry unknowingly, and then act as if it were yours. This is a judgment others have passed on to you, or it may be a judgment you have passed on to yourself.

There was a young woman I met who kept telling me she was very selfish. It's for this reason that she is disliked by many people. My question was, who told you you're selfish, and she replied that everybody has said that to you. But even then, continuing with my questions, as my way is, who said that to her? Her attention was drawn to the fine print, and she realized not everybody was saying she was selfish, but there are a few people who believe this about her. She bought that conclusion from them. Consequently, she has felt selfish ever since. She isn't a good person, she is selfish, and she can't be trusted. She dislikes selfish people; I said, okay, let's see what we can figure out.

Taking a closer look at selfishness, let's see what it means. Do you know what it means? Check out the word. A selfish person is not necessarily a mean person. The definition of selfishness is taking care of oneself. However, it implies a selfish person is someone who does not care for others and who is mean. This is not true. That wasn't what the word meant. Taking care of yourself is what the word meant. When she realized what had happened, she said, "Oh my god, everything changed.".

Here's another example. A person believes he is slow. Unlike other people, he is very slow. There's something wrong with him. “I don't understand what you're saying. It takes me a long time to do things. Is it possible for you to be slow? I don't understand. I need you to be slow with me. It's time to break it down".

What made him decide that he was slow, or who told him that?

He was always told by one of his bosses that he was too slow. It will take you forever to do it right. Nevertheless, I asked him, do you do things right the first time or do you do them wrong? It is my goal to do it right the first time because that is how I want to be. The last thing I want to do is rush through things and make a mistake. I want to get it right the first time. According to me. Is your pace slow? Would you consider yourself careful? How do you feel now about this? What's on your mind? You're slow or trying to get it right for the first time? According to me, that was him. It's important to me not to make mistakes.

Another person said that her fingers were numb, and she was unable to work. "Now that I am older, I am unable to hold things like I used to. In the past, I was incredibly fast." she has spend almost 30 years doing things very fast. Now, she cannot continue doing things as fast as she used to.

And that's against her defined definition of herself, which has been given to her as a form of appreciation: you're Superwoman. The image of a Superwoman is important to her. In the event that she is unable to do so, she becomes nervous, and her fingers become numb. There is a possibility of numbness spreading to the arms and shoulders, as well as frozen shoulders as a result. There might be a need for surgery after that to fix it.

Taking on the journey under those titles is also your decision. I'm a superwoman and I can do everything fast, and I can do everything slowly. My selfishness is a problem. What made you decide?

In order to understand what is in the fine print, you must find out why you made that decision. Thus, you laugh at those fine prints when you read them. And then you decide that you are not going to use them anymore. As a result, you feel relieved.

You cannot escape that image. which you continue to carry around with you, no matter what it takes, no matter how much effort you put into it. And you find that to be troublesome. As a result of that, you lose all your energy in the presence of your definitions. There is no one who can heal you. No one can do it. It is therefore necessary for you to let go of your self-definitions. It does not matter if you define yourself or if others have defined you and assigned labels to you. Don't let labels limit your vision. You should not be defined by your labels. Getting back to yourself will be hampered by them. You are more than your labels, and healing doesn't work that way. Being yourself is the key to healing.

Invalidating presence around you or making nothing of you

When you live with other people, you eat together, sleep together, and live together. Hence, there is a very well-connected network, sometimes involving only one person. There are times when there are several people living in the same house under the name of a family. These people contribute to your journey of life in their own beautiful way. They also benefit from your contributions.

Everything seems to be well adjusted because this is how life is; something else always happens in life, in family, and we constantly adjust, and, you know, we can't fight with family all the time, and family is there for you, and who else is there for you? That's why it's tough. We might not be ready to accept that someone very close to us is the leading cause of your illness.

If you accept that, then you must stand up to that issue and face it, and you must ask that precious relationship to stop doing it.

That relationship always there telling you how you could have done it better, how you can improve, how what you did wasn't right, how that other person would have done it better, or he already told you. You did not listen to him, and with all these suggestions and comments, you are being made less and less and less and less.

As they tell you, you're not where you're supposed to be; you don't exist the way you should. Their comments, suggestions, and help are very sugar-coated because they are the ones who matter most to you, and they have lived with you for years, and who could be a better person than them? As a result, the process takes a toll on you.

Eventually, you realize and agree that if they don't say you're okay, you aren't. As a result, I call this a negative presence around you or an invalidating presence.

✦ POINTS TO PONDER

- What are the three categories of fine prints? Give examples relating it to your life.
- Can you escape that image which you continue to carry around with you?
- Why should you not be defined by your labels?
- What is a negative presence around you? How does someone close to you invalidate your presence?

Healing is impossible if...

You have lived a life of a person who was becoming better and worse, who was doing good, then he wasn't doing good. You had been living the life of a person who became better and worse. There are times when you fall sick, times when you go up, and times when you go down. When you're down, that same person is helping you to come up, and when you're up, then that same person is helping you to go down. Just to keep the grace of our relationship, I will not say that person is doing it intentionally. Nevertheless, if someone has stones in their hands and throws them at you, and then this stone hits you, it will hurt you. You cannot say that, just because your loved one threw the stone, it won't hurt you. The stone will hurt you, impact you in some way.

In your life, you have to learn and recognize that person's capability of hurting you, or you have given him that power. You will not allow anyone else to tell you things about yourself that he says about you.

Now, I will name some types of relationships that you can have in this kind of relationship, including your spouse, your parents, your siblings, and your best friend. Almost like reading a murder mystery and finding out, oh my god, I never thought this could be the killer! However, these are the fine prints of healing. The fine prints can't be ignored because, as long as they aren't looked at, you will go through all the nine yards of healing, from one doctor to another, from one path to another praying to God, from churches and temples to receive no healing. There is a great deal of delicateness in these fine prints. Taking a closer look is necessary. Sometimes you are not ready to wear glasses because you can see clearly without them.

So looking through your life is imperative, meaningful, and necessary. If your life is not going in a straight line and you are experiencing slow ups and downs, what would you do? There's nothing to worry about. Assume that your life is going up, down, down, up, down. You will go down whenever you are up. It's not a comfortable ride. When you're going up, discover who gets you down. A few names or relatives or people will always be associated with you and connected to you; they know everything about you, and they know how to hurt you.

So Upon finding out who they are, it is not necessary to fight with them and then fire them immediately, which is not possible. There is something you need to learn about handling them, about educating them, and about telling them: no, no, no, no, no, don't get me hurt by doing that. The process of dealing with this situation can be learned gradually. Due to its relationship-based nature, it cannot be cut, cut, cut. There is a family element involved. A closer association with someone is involved. Those who care about healing should pay attention to this information. Healing without it is impossible.

✦ POINTS TO PONDER

- What should you do when you suddenly feel down after going up?
- What should you do when you find out who is responsible for making you feel low?
- When is healing impossible?

What you resist persists!

The phrase "what you resist persists" suggests that when you focus on resisting or fighting against something, you may actually give it more power and attention, causing it to persist or even grow stronger.

This idea is often associated with mindfulness and acceptance-based approaches to managing difficult thoughts, emotions, and experiences. Instead of trying to push away or suppress these experiences, these approaches encourage individuals to acknowledge and accept them without judgment or attachment, which can ultimately lead to greater emotional well-being and resilience.

However, it's important to note that there may be situations where resistance is necessary and can lead to positive outcomes. The phrase "what you resist persists" is not a universal truth but rather a reminder to consider the potential consequences of our actions and mindset.

When we are on our journey of healing, resistance is a word that must be understood. Generally, people say go with the flow when referring to that. Each other tells the other to accept or surrender. The same concept can be expressed in different ways.

We tend to avoid things we don't like when we live, and when we don't like something, we just go away from it. You can dislike anything that you know or dislike in a mild or strong expression, like, ‘Oh my god, I can't stand it, I hate it’. The degree to which you resist something is the extent to which you resist living; you resist yourself.

We are here to experience this world; when we stop experiencing this world, that resistance shuts us down.

Our resistance to something is always based on some reason. Let's say we don't like the color red. Anywhere you want to buy something, we say. ‘Let's remove the red color, you know, I don't want to buy anything red.’ You may not like people who like red color; you may not like buildings with red color; and you may not like several ingredients in food that are red.

Therefore, in this example, the resistance to a specific color expands in multiple directions at once. In that case, you will live less because you will be so focused on resisting the red color. You're always watching for it. Thus, when you resist something, you start searching for it since you want to resist it before it gets to you. You see a lot of red now, don't you? If you resist something, it persists.

If you resist any pain, physical or emotional, the more you accept and understand it; it becomes part of you.

A resistance is the opposite of an existence. The more you accept, the more existence comes to you with open arms and takes you along with its vibration of living. Therefore, it's an interesting topic to explore. We will discuss the effects of resistance in more detail. What can we do if we just learn to dissolve the resistance instead of avoiding it?

There should be an easier way to eliminate your various resistances. The healing process reduces resistance and makes you more present and gives you more lifeforce, making you more alive. Therefore, we will continue to explore ways to live without resisting.

Follow this process

We are continuing with handling the resistances that we have built up or certain things, as we mentioned in our earlier topic about, you know, your disliking for red color. How do you resist the color red all the time? And as a resistance to the red color, you keep looking out for the red color you fear. And you may not see the red color because the red color will put you off.

I generally take the example of asking somebody. If I asked you not to think about ice cream, what would you do or what would happen to you? He says, you know, oh, I just think about ice cream all the time. And the more I try not to think about ice cream, the more ice cream will show up.

So, living in a world of no or resisting things, and then you know, trying to avoid them, stay away from them for your peace of mind, for your mental health. It doesn't work like that; I haven't seen it work like that, supposing a woman is terrified of her mother-in-law and cannot handle her presence or even the thought of her or, you know, her voice on the phone. So, it means mother-in-law is like the ice cream, whom you do not want to think about, and the more you try to avoid, the more it shows up.

This fight continues with any character. It can be the boss; it can be your child, it can be your best friend who has betrayed you now or your best friend whom you think is not doing something favorable to you. So those kinds of things, you know, when you find the thoughts are circling in your head, and you're unable to stop.

So, that means there is something you are now resisting. The more you resist, the more you get. You resist; it persists. So, the solution is straightforward, so easy that it's kind of unbelievable.

So, when you know somebody says don't think about ice cream, ice cream pops up more and more. So now, let's think about ice cream- think everything about ice cream. You know what is there in the ice cream or for that matter, mother-in-law - think everything, let all the emotions about mother-in-law come to you, you know, her tone of voice and her expression, which you just avoid, not look at, let's look at them, all of them sit with everything about her. Everything. Sit as if we're sitting in a sauna, and this heat is covering you on all sides, you know, sit with it till it starts melting away.

This is the natural process and natural phenomenon when you start facing something eye to eye or you bring out all the hidden features of it or all the fears about it. All the losses about that relationship, let everything go through you. Without resistance, it might give you a stomach ache. It might make you feel like getting up; it might bring tears; it might bring lots of anger and rage but sit through it. Sit through it; stay in the middle. Sit as long as you can sit comfortably and then sit again, little by little, and face it.

Face that ugliness in that relationship, face that dislike, face that hatred in that relationship. Face that fear in that relationship. The more you face it, face to face. More you will see it melting away.

I can guarantee you it works. Nothing else will work. No religious chanting will work, no medication will work, no mindfulness will work, they will all work little by little, or you push it down, push it down. I'm not asking you to push it down. I'm asking you to bring it on. And look at it comfortably by being there and your eyes closed. Let all the emotions, pain, sensations, and feelings about that particular person, relationship, or idea appear. And let all the suppression express; the best and the only way to handle suppression is an expression, express. Let all your body parts express it; you know, a frozen shoulder has some suppression there, let that frozenness of the shoulder express it in the form of emotion, and then you'll see yourself healing.

Healing comes to you, those who can express themselves in their purest form, without changing the form of expression, without saying that, ‘oh, it doesn't hurt anymore. I'm fine now, and I can handle it’. Just check whatever it hurts, and it will start healing.

As I mentioned, healing is a process. Yes, healing is a process that involves physical, emotional, and mental recovery from an injury, illness, or trauma. The process of healing can vary depending on the individual and the severity of the condition.

In physical healing, the body undergoes a series of biological processes that help repair damaged tissues and restore normal function. This may involve the formation of new tissues, the regeneration of damaged cells, and the removal of toxins and other harmful substances.

Emotional healing involves dealing with the feelings and emotions that arise from a traumatic event or an emotional disturbance. This may involve working through feelings of fear, anger, sadness, or guilt, and learning coping mechanisms to deal with these emotions.

Mental healing involves addressing the underlying psychological factors that may be contributing to a person's illness or trauma. This may involve therapy, medication, or other forms of support to help manage and overcome mental health challenges.

Overall, the healing process can be a gradual and ongoing journey that requires patience, self-care, and a commitment to one's own health and well-being.

Take one step at a time. Go slow, go gradual. But this is the only way. The way out is the way through it. Thank you
